The Canadian authorities have steadily declined to permit the registration of copyright under the Canadian Copyright Act to citizens of the United States, the ground of objection being that the enactment of the Congress of the United States and the President's proclamation of July 1, 1891, extending the benefits of the Chace Bill to all British subjects, did not constitute 'an International Copyright Treaty' within the meaning of the Canadian Copyright Act, which provides, as pointed out above, that any person domiciled in Canada or any part of the British possessions, or being a citizen of any country having an International Copyright Treaty with the United Kingdom, who is an author of any book, &c., shall have the sole right of printing, publishing &c., for a number of years on certain conditions. This is a narrow construction of the Canadian Act, and savours somewhat of smartness and sharp practice. I believe it is not a fair construction, and is certainly not in accord with the spirit and manifest intention of the Act. I am not alone in entertaining this opinion, which still remains to be tested.

In February 1897 the United States Government proposed the negotiation of a Copyright Convention which would expressly meet this allegation of the Canadian Government. This proposal the Canadian Government declined to entertain.

Far greater liberality in copyright matters is shown in the United States to Canadian authors than is shown in Canada to American authors. A Canadian author can secure copyright in the United States if he prints his work in that country, and publishes contemporaneously with the publication in Canada. An American author parting with his rights for Canada to a Canadian publisher who may print an edition in Canada, cannot, as the law is interpreted at Ottawa, secure any protection in the Canadian market until after the book has been registered at Stationers' Hall in London. As the law is construed in England, an author who desires to secure British copyright by publication in Canada must comply with the Canadian requirements, one of which requirements is that the work must be printed here. But if an American author prints his work in Canada, copyright is refused him at Ottawa. He cannot, therefore, secure any protection whatever in Canada,⁴ unless he takes his work to England, publishes there contemporaneously with his publication in the United States, and registers at Stationers' Hall in London. If he were allowed after printing in Canada to register his copyright under the Canadian Act he would thereby acquire all the advantages of the Imperial Copyright Acts; but this is denied him. He cannot secure any protection whatever under our local laws, nor can he even bring an action to prevent infringement of his rights until after he has registered his book at Stationers' Hall in London.

The Canadian rights in any American book which is likely to have a considerable sale in Canada are quickly purchased by some Canadian publisher, and the book is published simultaneously with the publication in England and the United States. Mr. Winston Churchill's 'Crisis,' and Miss Mary Johnston's 'Audrey,' are examples of such books. If the English publication, with consequent delays, could be dispensed with and all the advantages of the British Copyright Acts could be acquired by printing and contemporaneous publishing in Canada,⁵ as they could be acquired were the bar against registration at Ottawa removed, a strong inducement would be offered to copyright American books in Canada.

The importation of American books in sheets into Canada is considerable, although it is yearly diminishing as our publishing facilities increase and trade grows. The present duty of 20 per cent. is an obstacle to such importation, and if the facilities I have referred to were afforded in Canada to the American authors, and the present tedious delays occasioned by the necessity of obtaining British copyright removed, an end would be put to the importation in sheets of many books, and an effectual end in the case of more popular works of fiction, which have a sure market in Canada.

The principal difficulty which British authors and Canadian publishers had to contend with prior to 1891 was due to the proximity of the United States. So long as the Canadian law remained in force which provided for the collection of the 12½ per cent. duty for the benefit of British authors, the importation of cheap pirated editions of British works could not be prevented, unless the work was reproduced in Canada, and such reproduction was impossible chiefly owing to the limited market and unsettled copyright conditions in this country.

The passage of the Chace Bill by Congress and the President's proclamation changed the whole aspect of the Canadian publishing trade, but the making of a Canadian edition of a British book still remained a more precarious speculation for the Canadian publisher than the making of a British one was for the British publisher.⁶ When the British publisher made an arrangement with an author, either by out-and-out purchase or by an agreed royalty, and issued a copyrighted edition, he had the market to himself, and no man might sell a copy of any edition therein. When the Canadian publisher made an arrangement with an author or copyright owner to bring out a Canadian edition—a speculation involving considerable pecuniary risk—he had to pay for the right to do it, as the English publisher had, but his market was likely to be interfered with by an influx of copies of a cheap edition from the Old Country, not sold to the public in the United Kingdom, but prepared expressly for exportation to Canada and other possessions, and styled a 'Colonial Edition.' A Canadian publisher might have purchased from an English author the right to reproduce a Canadian edition; he might have gone to large expense in advertising and popularising his purchase, yet, before his books could be placed on the counters of Canadian retail dealers he as a rule found in the market the cheap Colonial Edition imported to compete with and undersell his own, even though he had contracted as effectually as he could with the English author and publisher for the Canadian market.⁷

In 1899 the third International Congress of Publishers was held in London, at which there was a representative gathering of British and foreign publishers. The question of Canadian copyright occupied one of the sittings of the Congress. Professor Mavor, representing the Canadian Authors' Society, was present, and delivered an interesting address, from the official report of which I quote:—

'Professor Mavor said there was a difference between the law officers of the Crown and the Canadian law officers with respect to the rights of Canada to legislate for copyright in Canada, and there was no doubt that publishers on both sides held extreme views. When this Society turned their attention to it, they considered whether some middle path might not be arrived at which would satisfy reasonable people on both sides of the water. They laid down four principles to guide them. They thought it useless, considering the present population of Canada, to propose a manufacture clause, and therefore set that aside. In the second place, they thought the system of licensing was far too complicated to be worked out satisfactorily. Thirdly, they thought it would be a great pity for Canada to do anything to lead to the withdrawal of the Berne Convention; and fourthly, they thought it would be a great pity to disturb the existing relations as regarded copyright between England and the United States. They went to some of the publishers, and asked them to point out where the shoe pinched, and it appeared that the publishers had a reasonable grievance. They said that, when they bought what they supposed to be Canadian rights, sometimes, before they could get their books on the bookshelves, English editions were in the market side by side with the domestic editions. There was no suggestion that the British publishers acted otherwise than in perfect good faith; but wholesale dealers were in the habit of purchasing large numbers of books, and sending some to the Cape and Australia, and some to Canada. It appears that something would be done in connection with that, by explaining it to the British publishers, and asking them to assist in passing legislation to carry it into effect. If the clause was carried in England, the Canadian Government would pass an Act to enforce it there.'

Mr. H. L. Thompson, a member of the publishing house of The Copp, Clark Company, was also present. Mr. Thompson said that the copyright question in Canada was understood very slightly by the people at large, and if they mentioned copyright they thought it had something to do with monopoly. Speaking of his own house, he could say they cordially supported the suggestion made by Professor Mavor. It is difficult to understand why Mr. H. L. Thompson and his partner, Mr. Thomas, are now, only two years afterwards, to be found advocating exactly the contrary views.

The following resolution was adopted by the Congress:—

'That it is eminently desirable in the interests of English owners of copyright, and for the maintenance of the Convention of Berne, that some satisfactory arrangements should be entered into with Canada in regard to copyright matters. On this ground the Conference desires to give cordial support to the proposal brought forward by Professor Mavor.'

In the year 1900 a Bill was introduced by Lord Monkswell into the House of Lords to consolidate the law relating to literary copyright. At the instance of the Canadian Authors' Society a clause was introduced into this Bill empowering the Legislature of any British possession, if a book had been first lawfully published in any other part of Her Majesty's Dominions, and it was proved to the satisfaction of an officer, appointed by the Government of such possession to receive such proofs, that the owner of the copyright had lawfully granted either a license to import for sale in such British possession, or a license to reproduce⁸ therein by any process, an edition or editions of any such book designed for sale only in such British possession, it should be lawful for the Legislature of such possession by Act or Ordinance to provide for the prohibition of the importation, except with the written consent of the licensee, into such possession of any copies of such book printed elsewhere except under such license as aforesaid, except that two copies might be specially imported for the bona fide use of each of the public free libraries, of the university and college libraries, and law libraries of any duly organised law institution or society for the use of its members.

The fourth Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire met in London, when Lord Monkswell's Bill was before Parliament, and unanimously adopted a resolution, which I proposed and which was seconded by the Hon. Thomas Fergus, of New Zealand, declaring its approval of the Bill and expressing the earnest hope that it might speedily become law.

Lord Monkswell's Bill did not succeed in getting through the required stages to make it law,

⁷ This is prevented by the Canadian Act of 1900.—Ed. P.C.

but the British Government has now taken the matter up, and the King's Speech at the opening of the present Parliament announces a Copyright Bill as a Government measure.

Towards the close of the Parliamentary session of 1900 the Honourable Mr. Fisher introduced into the Canadian Parliament a Bill which was found to be generally acceptable, and which ultimately became law. This Bill, usually referred to as the Fisher Bill, provides in effect that if a Canadian publisher, under license from the owner of a British copyright, reproduces in Canada an edition designed for sale only in Canada, the Minister of Agriculture may prohibit the importation into Canada of any copy of the book printed elsewhere. The Fisher Bill was passed with the full approval of the Imperial authorities, and is another great concession to the Canadian trade. Now, if a Canadian publisher buys the British copyright of a work so far as Canada is concerned, he may protect himself not only against the introduction of United States and foreign prints, but even as against the introduction of reprints produced in Great Britain itself.

The Fisher Bill, which was passed at the instance of the Canadian Society of Authors, with the sanction of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Executive of the Employing Printers' Association, expressed in formal resolutions laid before the Government, and with the tacit approval of the Canadian publishers, placed the Canadian publishing trade upon a firm basis. It was the final step in securing the establishment of the publishing trade in Canada.

In June 1900 Professor Mavor and I were called before the Select Committee of the House of Lords and questioned as to whether in our opinion the Fisher Bill was intended to be local in its operation and not to conflict with the Imperial Copyright laws. We gave the opinion that the Bill was intended to be confined in its operation to Canada. This opinion was accepted as a satisfactory explanation, and the Bill received no opposition in England, and came into effect without disallowance. By allowing this Bill to become law, the Imperial authorities gave that further recognition to the Canadian publishers which successfully established their trade, and put an end to the deadlock which had existed between Great Britain and Canada for twenty years. Mr. W. J. Gage, the chairman of the Wholesale Booksellers' Section of the Board of Trade, himself testified to the present prosperity of the trade at a banquet on the 19th of last December, at which he entertained the Section, and congratulated his hearers 'upon the last year having been with them a year of prosperity, and a year of prosperity with the paper trade as well.'

What, then, is the reason for the present agitation? Does anyone pretend to assert that the present conditions under the Fisher Bill are not working well?

Under the provisions of the Fisher Bill it has become possible for any Canadian publisher to go to England, make arrangements with the owner of a British copyright for the publication in Canada of a Canadian edition, and then publish here freed from the fear of an invasion of his market by British, American, or any other foreign reproductions, whether the publication was first in Canada or subsequent to publication elsewhere.

To summarise the position: In 1847, the Imperial authorities yielded to Canadian demands and permitted the introduction of the cheap American reprints of British copyright books. This arrangement our own Parliament terminated.

In 1886, the Imperial Parliament set at rest a question which had existed in reference to the copyright in books first published in Canada by providing that the British Copyright Acts should apply to such works in the same manner as they apply to works first produced in the United Kingdom. They now occupy exactly the same footing.

In 1900, the Imperial authorities again yielded to Canadian demands, and permitted the Fisher Act to come into force, which prohibits the importation of copies of a work printed in the United Kingdom, when the Canadian publisher produces in Canada an edition of the work under license from the copyright owner.

The Canadian author who publishes his work in Canada secures copyright not only in the whole British Empire, but obtains protection in all the countries comprising the Copyright Union. If he comply with the provisions of the Chace Bill, and print and publish contemporaneously in the United States, he secures the whole market of the States as well, which was a loss to him prior to 1891. Sir John Bourinot thus obtains protection for his property in his valuable historical productions, and is reaping splendid returns from the United States market. Mr. Seton-Thompson and Dr. Drummond are doing the same. Yearly the authors of Canada are gathering a harvest from this great market. Secured by the Berne Convention, Mr. Frechette's "La Noël au Canada," printed in Toronto, goes to France safe from continental piracies. Not a year passes that Canadian editions of books are not shipped to Great Britain, and the trade is increasing. Examples of such books are Professor Clark's "Paraclete," and Colonel Denison's "Soldiering in Canada."

The Canadian publishers are now secured in the possession of their own market when once they have acquired a license from a British copyright owner, and have reproduced the work in Canada. Canadian printed editions of Rudyard Kipling, George Eliot, Francis Parkman, and of scores of others may now exclusively be dealt in by the Canadian book-selling trade. Prominent American publishers have told me repeatedly that our Canadian Copyright Law as it stands is superior to anything they have had in the United States for the benefit and encouragement of publishing.

It was once the custom for the English author, when dealing with the American publisher, to throw in Canada as an inducement to complete the deal. Mr. Thomas in his address to which I have referred stated that this is still the custom. Mr. Thomas knows better than this, for, while this was undoubtedly the custom some years ago when Canada and her trade were little known or regarded in England, it is not the custom now. Rudyard Kipling, Hall Caine, Benjamin Kidd, Crockett, Doyle, Hope, Parker, Miss Fowler, Miss Cholmondeley, Miss Montresor, Marie Corelli, all now deal with Canada as a separate market, and contract directly with Canadian publishers. This custom is growing rapidly, and more books are now directly offered to Canadian publishers than can be safely taken, having regard to the present state of the market.

Those who at present comprise a majority of the Booksellers' Section of the Board of Trade desire to have a Canadian Copyright Law of their own, to secure authority which will enable the Canadian Parliament to pass an Act which would separate Canadians from the rule of British copyright legislation, and necessarily, too, from its benefits. It goes without saying that if this is effectuated Canada will be excluded from the Copyright Union and also from protection in the vast market of the United States; and as a further consequence the works of Canadian authors would again become public property outside of Canada, and the British publisher would surely retaliate.

And what end will be gained by all this? Nothing but the right for Canadian publishers to print in Canada the majority of British or foreign books in any cheap form they please, and to compile such works as School Readers made up of extracts culled from copyright works, subject only to such safeguards as will secure to the owners of the copyrights infringed upon a reasonable royalty, in the imposition of which they can have no effective voice.

Were the proposals of the Board of Trade carried into effect, it would reduce our country below the standard of national morality and of international fair play maintained by all other civilised nations now united in the Copyright Union. Canadian authors would then encounter the same difficulty in securing recognition at the hands of Canadian publishers that American authors experienced with their publishers prior to 1891, when British books could be published in the United States without payment of royalty.

I agree in the view that the rights of an author are just as much entitled to protection as any other rights in property. I am absolutely opposed to any retrograde movement on the copyright question. I believe that the rights of publishers are inseparably bound up with those of authors, and I regard any attempt to deprive authors of any rights in the property which is the product of their intellectual exertions as 'nothing short of a crime equal to that of a highwayman,' nor can I submit to remain a member of the Board of Trade without recording my warm dissent from the action of the Council and the Executive. I object emphatically to our taking the law into our own hands, and fixing what we may be pleased to think is a reasonable price to be paid authors for their property, merely because it is the product of their intellectual labours. I am satisfied to accept the Canadian law as it is, and to abide by its provisions if they are fairly construed.

I maintain that the subject of copyright is abstruse, and is not to be mastered in a few days or in a few months. Long as this letter is, I have stated only a single phase of the question. I could better have dealt with the matter in a short address, and I very much regret that the Executive of the Council did not afford me the opportunity of appearing before them when I asked it. Had this been done, I feel satisfied that the Board would not have been committed to the proposals the Council are now engaged in advancing, nor would the Board have been subjected in England, as it already has been, to the criticisms of those who understand the copyright question, and with some indignation resent the course of the Board in advancing reasons for its action which are not in accordance with the real facts.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

GEORGE N. MORANG.

THE INCONSEQUENCES OF SARA

By DANAË MAY.

Crown 8vo. price 6s.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—'A brilliant novel. . . It is always a pleasure to be able to give a good book a good welcome. When the book in question is the first work of a new writer, as we think is the case with "The Inconsequences of Sara," the pleasure is greatly intensified. Miss May is to be most heartily congratulated on her incursion into fiction. Her novel is one of the smartest and most amusing pieces of work that have appeared for some considerable time: her heroine the most delightful since Mr. Anthony Hope burst upon us with Dolly. . . No more promising work has come from a woman writer since the tales of John Oliver Hobbes.'

HOW TO MAKE AN INDEX

By HENRY B. WHEATLEY,

Author of 'How to Form a Library,' 'How to Catalogue a

In the volume the various theories concerning Indexing are set forth, and definite rules are laid down and illustrated for the making of an Index, while erroneous methods are exposed and illustrated by humorous examples.

'We are grateful to Mr. Wheatley for his eloquent treatise.
As a practical indexer he has entire grasp of the subject, and fully illustrates the difficulties, pitfalls, and snares which beset one who would attempt an Index Rerum. Some very valuable suggestions are scattered through the work, particularly in the final chapter. Altogether, this should prove a highly acceptable addition to the "Book-Lover's Library."'

Demy 8vo. very fully Illustrated, cloth gilt, 1 vol. in box, 10s. 6d.

There are many editions of General Lew Wallace's great novel, but they are nearly all cheap and unsatisfactory. The Players' Edition is printed on special paper, in good type, and sumptuously bound, illustrated by photographs of scenes and characters in the play. It is an edition which preserves the dignity of the novel, and forms besides a most interesting souvenir of the play.

WILLIAM BLACK, A BIOGRAPHY.

By WEMYSS REID.*

If the true end and value of biography is to put before the world a vivid, living picture of its subject, then I am sure Sir Wemyss Reid, in writing his life of William Black, has fully succeeded; he has done the work he had proposed to himself in a very admirable way. His whole heart was in it, and he writes with an affectionate earnestness that wins one's sympathy. Whatever impression the reading of such a volume may make on an outsider I am hardly capable of judging; but for myself, who have had a constant and more or less intimate acquaintance with the late Mr. William Black for more than thirty years, almost every page of it brings to my remembrance some pleasant incident or the name of some friend of whom I had some knowledge.

Sir Wemyss Reid has the happy faculty of exhibiting his hero in every phase of his character. To the outer world William Black appears as 'the silent, self-centred man, whose genius men admired, but whose real spirit was a mystery to them,' and another side of him is exemplified in his action towards his friend Barry in his illness.

'More than once, when going to visit Barry, I have encountered Black on his way to the same place . . . and always he carried with him, regardless of appearances, some gift for the dying man, now a hare dangling in dangerous proximity to the smartly cut coat, and now a basin of jelly or soup.'

Mr. Barry, it appears from Sir W. Reid's narrative, served as the model for Willie Fitzgerald in 'Shandon Bells.'

It had slipped my memory that we published 'A Daughter of Heth' anonymously. It is with the mention of this book that Sir Wemyss Reid opens his narrative. Black had made a reputation before the publication of this work, but undoubtedly 'A Daughter of Heth' lifted him at once to the highest rank as a writer of fiction. This was in the year 1871. I remember well the generous enthusiasm with which Black spoke and wrote about the novel and attractive way that book was advertised, and to this, with his usual modesty, he attributed much of the success of his novel; that, however, certainly did not account for its success, though it may have assisted it.

'A Daughter of Heth' ran into eight or nine editions, in three volumes, at 31s. 6d., in less than four months—and I may say in the one-volume form it has been running ever since.

Among Mr. Black's artist friends not mentioned, I think, by Sir Wemyss Reid, was the late Fred. Walker. He drew for us a most charming picture as a frontispiece to the first one-volume edition of 'A Daughter of Heth,' an engraving of course well known to a number of readers. Coquette had begun to play one of Mozart's sonatas when Leezabeth banged the door open and advanced into the room, exclaiming, 'Preserve us a', lassie, do ye think what ye're doing? Do ye no ken this is the Sabbath, and that ye're in a respectable house?' Mr. Walker was so proud of this delightful drawing that he expressed a wish to buy it back, and I regretfully felt compelled to part with it.

It must be understood that I am not criticising Sir W. Reid's work—I leave that to the critics. All I wish to do is to jot down a few impressions which this delightful volume has brought back to memory.

It was on Feb. 27, 1872, Thanksgiving Day for the restoration to health of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Mr. Wm. Black was present in our old Fleet Street house to view the procession; an account of this has already appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR at the time, and a further account appeared at the time of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. Mr. Black sat at a small desk in a corner, and in the midst of a very noisy crowd of young people, by whom he did not seem the least disturbed, he wrote a long and most amusing account of the procession and the folks 'In a Balcony,' which appeared in the Daily News next day. This is another confirmation of that power of concentration and speed of writing in the midst of noise and confusion which Mr. Reid frequently mentions. It was in that room and on that occasion that the author of 'The Daughter of Heth' and the authoress of 'John Halifax' first became acquainted. Mrs. Craik wrote to me afterwards, 'Thanksgiving Day was a real enjoyment, for which I and my friends thank you much.'

It was in 1874 that Mr. Black married his second wife, Miss Simpson, whose father, Mr. Wharton Simpson, had been an acquaintance of mine many long years before that time. It was at their pleasant residence, Airlie House, Camberwell Grove, that I met him again, and it was probably on the occasion mentioned by Sir W. Reid when Mr. Black and his wife 'gave a hospitable welcome at his own house to three other married couples, and a father accompanied by his daughter.' I was accompanied by my daughter, and there I met Mr. Charles Gibbon and Mrs. Gibbon. Charles Gibbon was one of Black's earliest friends, and who, as Mr. Reid records, subsequently during a long illness was indebted to him for much assistance in his literary work.

Of course I had much to do with Mr. Black, and much correspondence, always of the most pleasant character, during the publication of nearly all his novels. Sir Wemyss Reid gives interesting accounts of the methods of writing, or of the characters of most of them. I will only say generally that we always agreed very well in their production.

I have, however, a peculiar interest in 'Green Pastures and Piccadilly.' When Mr. Black heard that I was about to take a holiday in 'The Rocky Mountains,' he wrote me a humorous letter about Cheyenne. I told the story in my book, 'Frank's Rancho,' but I will venture to quote from it now, for my book was published, alas! seventeen years ago, and, although it went through five editions at the time, it may not be much remembered now.

'In Mr. Wm. Black's "Green Pastures and Piccadilly" there is a description of Cheyenne as it was twelve years ago (now, alas! over thirty years ago). There was a time when this now thriving city had earned for itself the name of "Hell upon Wheels," and I was told by an inhabitant who lived there then, when the Union Pacific Railway was being made, that bowie knives and six-shooters were freely used . . . and that three or four murders a week were the average, to say nothing of fights with Sioux

* London: Cassell & Company, Limited; and Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited.

Indians. Cheyenne had settled down from those exciting times when Mr. Black arrived there, and he found "nothing about its appearance to entitle anyone to call it Hell upon Wheels."

"Certainly," he says, "the Cheyenne we saw was far from being an exciting place; there was not a single corpse lying at any of the saloon doors, nor any duel being fought in the street."

"As I have a personal interest in the matter, I will venture to give another extract from 'Green Pastures and Piccadilly.'"

"Mr. Black says that—

"As he was unanimously requested by his party to pay a tribute of gratitude to the clean and comfortable inn at the station, he must now do so; only he must also confess that he was bribed, for the good-natured landlord was pleased, as we sat at supper, to send in to us, with his compliments, a bottle of real French champagne. Good actions should never go unrewarded; so the gentle reader is most earnestly entreated, the first time he goes to Cheyenne, to stay at this inn and give large orders. Moreover, the present writer not wishing to have his conduct in this particular regarded as being too mercenary, would wish to explain that the bottle of champagne in question was, as was subsequently discovered, charged for in the bill and honestly paid for too; but he cannot allow the landlord to be deprived of all credit for his hospitable intentions merely on account of an error on the part of the clerk."

"Just before I left England, and knowing that I contemplated a visit to the Rockies, Mr. Black was good enough to request me to look into his book and to see, from the circumstances, as quoted above, whether I was not fairly entitled to have that bottle of champagne produced; he also desired me to present his compliments to a 'pretty Scotch lassie' at the hotel.

"Of course I pursued the inquiry: I had by chance stayed at this very hotel, but I ascertained, alas! that poor old Jones, the good-natured landlord, had long since made his pile in the good old times, when he could charge crowds of passengers a dollar and a half for their meals, instead of (as now) seventy-five cents only; had retired to a farm somewhere in Idaho; had died, and left an enormous fortune to his widow. I may also inform Mr. Black that 'the pretty Scotch lassie' is now the mother of a large family somewhere up in the mountains.

"The inn has become the property of the Union Pacific, and is, in fact, one of the dining stations of that enterprising company. I regret to say that the intelligent and civil manager, though perfectly acquainted with the circumstances (through having read 'Green Pastures' in a ten-cent edition), did not feel it to be a part of his duty to his employers to hand over to me the bottle of champagne, notwithstanding the credentials I presented. He did not, however, raise the slightest objection when I invited him to join me and my friend M. in drinking to the health of the writer of 'Green Pastures,' to the wealthy widow of the departed Jones, and to 'the pretty Scotch lassie,' wherever she may be.

A local newspaper thus, somewhat erroneously, recorded our visit to this city:—

"A. B. and C. D., two Englishmen who have been travelling around the world, stopped off yesterday morning and are guests at the Pacific. They had letters of introduction to Jones (!) the former landlord of the hotel, and had been told that Cheyenne was 'Hell on Wheels.' They are disappointed."

Mr. Black was always one of the first to write me most kindly about my books whenever I brought one out, and of the work here referred to he sent me a cutting from the Daily News, and wrote:

"I have been greatly pleased with 'Frank's Rancho,' and the atmosphere of vivid reality you have introduced into the narrative. I say 'ditto' to the remarks in the Daily News this morning.

"Yours very faithfully,

"WILLIAM BLACK."

I remember a very pleasant gathering to which I do not think Sir W. Reid refers, although he was present on the occasion. It was a banquet presided over by the genial J. R. Osgood, and was given in celebration of Mr. Black's Jubilee Birthday in 1891. Many literary, artistic, and journalistic friends were present. Mr. Black was joyous, almost boisterous, and presented a singularly ruddy and youthful appearance on this his fiftieth birthday, which gave promise of a long and happy life, which, alas! was not fulfilled. Osgood was genial and pleasant, and Du Maurier was there full of life and spirit. Now all three have gone. Osgood was the first to depart; he died in 1892, to the grief of all who knew him. Du Maurier rests under a spreading yew in Hampstead Churchyard, and above him is a tablet bearing this singular inscription—

"A little trust that when we die

We reap our sowing, and so good bye."

William Black lies 'at rest in the churchyard at Rottingdean, where he had spent so many hours of quiet happiness in other days.'

Mr. Black's name will live long in his charming works, and Sir Wemyss has given us a vivid picture of his personality, which, portraying as it does the outward and the inward characteristics of the man, will be read with eager interest by all who have been delighted with his works.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has accepted a copy of Part I. of 'Britain at Work,' the exceedingly interesting and attractive pictorial description of our national industries, just published by Messrs. Cassell & Company.

In 'Napoleon, a Sketch of his Life, Character, Struggles, and Achievements,' Mr. Thomas E. Watson has told the story of the Emperor's wonderful career with no special research, but mainly from a popular point of view, to elicit the human interest. The point of view is American and strongly anti-British. Napoleon is throughout celebrated as the organiser of revolution, the foe of oligarchies. Messrs. Macmillan publish the book, which is illustrated with several portraits of Napoleon and of his family.

Mr. John Murray has appointed Mr. F. A. Martin to represent him in visiting the great public and secondary schools. Mr. Martin is well known in scholastic circles, having for several years past represented Messrs. George Gill & Sons, Limited.

We suggested to Messrs. Cassell & Company some time ago that they should include a sporting picture now and then in their fine work, 'The Nation's Pictures'; but they have done better than that, as they have started an entirely new series, entitled 'Sporting Pictures,' size about 14 by 17, in parts at 1s. net, with four large coloured prints. The reproductions will be from the works of modern artists, and, judging from Part I., the work is destined to be a great success. Nothing like it or approaching it has ever been offered to the great British sport-loving public.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish in their series of 'English Classics for Schools' an edition of Boswell's 'Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides,' furnished with a biographical sketch of Boswell and full notes by Mr. H. B. Cotterill.

In Temple Bar for May, Mr. Benjamin Taylor finds the solution of the 'Housing Problem' in the removal of factories and workshops to the country rather than in State interference with the builder. The complete stories are 'Two against Fate,' by Miss Kirkby Hill; 'That which was Lost,' by Major W. P. Drury; 'A Jacobin's Romance,' by Mr. Sidney Pickering; and an Indian story entitled 'The Vision of Abdullah Khan.' The serials by Miss Broughton and Miss Simpson are continued.

Messrs. Cassell & Company announce that they will publish a superb illustrated work on the Coronation, entitled 'The Coronation Book of Edward VII., King of all the Britains and Emperor of India,' in six parts.

The publication of Mr. C. Ranger-Gull's new novel of Oxford life, 'His Grace's Grace,' has been postponed until the autumn season. In consequence of this postponement, Mr. Ranger-Gull's historical novel, 'The Serf,' will be published rather earlier than was originally intended, and it may be expected early in May.

'The Romance of an Eastern Prince,' which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on May 7, is to reveal a grave political peril to England's Empire in India, as yet unknown to the British public, and contain the sole indictment of Kipling from the Eastern standpoint.

Mr. R. B. Marston has been re-elected Honorary Secretary to the Council of the Publishers' Association for the ensuing year.

A second edition of Professor Bower's 'Practical Botany for Beginners' is now issued by Messrs. Macmillan. In revising the work, and bringing it thoroughly up to date, Dr. Bower has been assisted by Mr. D. T. Gwynne-Vaughan.

Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co. will issue shortly a volume entitled 'The Warrior Woman,' from the pen of Mr. Edward Henry Vizetelly. 'The Warrior Woman' deals, as the title indicates, with 'members of the gentler sex who have wielded the glaive in battle.'

Mr. Guy Francis Laking, the King's Armourer, contributes to the Art Journal for May a preliminary notice of the armour in the Wallace Collection.

A second edition will be ready next week of 'Summer Holidays among the Glories of France,' by T. Francis Bumpus.

To the May number of Macmillan's Magazine Lieut.-Colonel Maude contributes a critical article on 'Our Cavalry in South Africa,' the Hon. J. W. Fortescue writes on the career of Sir Harry Smith, and 'May Day on the Exe,' by H. T. S., describes trout-fishing in the country of Lorna Doone. The number contains the opening chapters of a novel by a new writer.

In the May number of the English Illustrated Magazine John Oliver Hobbes has a story. Mrs. Steuart Erskine has a paper on the Terra Cotta industry which Mrs. Watts has revived—in connection partly with the Arts and Crafts movement—at her home at Limnerslease.

The issue in monthly parts at 6d. each of the illustrated edition of Green's 'Short History' has occasioned so great a demand that it has been necessary to go to press with a large second impression. This is now ready.

The May number of 'The House: the Journal of Home Arts and Crafts' will contain an article on 'Decorations for the Coronation.' Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is the publisher.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish on May 7 a novel by Andrew Herry, entitled 'The Green Country.'

Mr. Edward Arnold will publish shortly a volume by Lieut. C. R. N. Burne, R.N., entitled 'With the Naval Brigade in Natal,' which covers the period October 1899 to October 1900.

'In a young country like ours, with a great and promising future before it, and because we are part of a great empire, this important matter of copyright should not be left so largely as it has been, in the hands of those holding narrow and provincial ideas of copyright, but should be given to a carefully chosen commission, whose report would be the basis of Government action.'—WILLIAM TYRRELL, in the Toronto Globe, April 5.

Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago, have in preparation an 'Index to Recitations, Readings, and Dialogues.'

Mrs. Eric Pritchard has in the press a volume entitled 'The Cult of Chiffon,' to be published shortly by Mr. Grant Richards. The writer's aim has been to 'encourage the attainment of all that is beautiful in the modes of the moment.'

THE LATE THOMAS TEGG.

The Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will be glad to be put in communication with the heirs or descendants of the late Mr. Thomas Tegg, bookseller, of Cheapside, on a matter important to themselves.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

A WARNING.

Booksellers throughout the British Empire should be on their guard as regards the American series called 'The Humboldt Library of Science,' as a great many of the works reprinted in it are pirated editions of British copyright works. Booksellers in the Colonies &c. will be doing good service if they will report to the President of the Publishers' Association, Stationers' Hall, London, E.C.

THE BURNS' 'AULD CLAY BUGGIN.'

A purposed notable feature in the coming St. Louis World's Exposition is an exact reproduction of the birth-homes of two or three of the greater English and Scotch writers—litterateurs who are recognised as 'the world's men of letters.' The suggestion is that exact facsimiles of the buildings and the chief historic relics they contain shall be made. It is proposed that these shall be rebuilt in permanent form, so that they may remain in Forest Park, St. Louis, long after the less stable portions of the World's Fair have done their duty and disappeared. Recent talk on these subjects has now become a fact. The Burns' Cottage Association has been organised in America with John V. Dick as President, and James Muir Dixon, Secretary.

The 'Auld Clay Buggin,' the very humble cottage under the thatch of which Robert Burns was born on January 25, 1759, is of clay, with a sanded front, whitewashed, and was built mainly by the hands of the poet's father while he was working as a gardener for Ferguson of Doonholm. The house, as all pilgrims to Ayr know, is one storey high, and consists of a kitchen in one end and a best parlour in the other. In the latter is a fireplace, and in a niche by its side is a bed. As to Bobbie, it is the opinion of the old wives of the town that was in the tiny kitchen. Replicas of the bed and of the other important items in the little white house in Ayr are included in the St. Louis scheme.

'The bed in which he first began

To be that various thing called man'

The co-operation of the leading Burns societies and other Scottish associations, both here and in America, has been promised. A suggestion has been made that the replica of the cottage and relics shall be free gifts from the sons of Scotland—whether at home or abroad—to St. Louis. Further, if permissible, it is proposed also to build some other historic Scottish structure on the Fair grounds, as room will be needed for the accumulation of Scottish relics that promise to pour in. The Scotch element is strong and influential in American life, and keeps itself in closer relations with the old home than any other foreign strain to be found there.

The address of Mr. George F. Parker, the resident British representative of the World's Fair, is Sanctuary House, Tothill Street, Westminster, S.W.

Letters to the Editor

COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

SIR,—I have read Mr. Morang's letter about Canadian copyright with much care and deep interest, but, strong as is the case which he makes out for Imperial as against local legislation in copyright, there are one or two points which appear to me to pass almost unnoticed in his letter.

It is a curious and remarkable fact that, throughout this long and somewhat acrimonious discussion in the Dominion, the interests of authors are rarely brought forward. The agitation for Canadian 'manufacturing clauses' comes from the manufacturers only. Speaking in the Canadian Senate in June 1895 Mr. Boulton said:—

'Now how many publishers and individuals are there in the Copyright Association who are pressing for a change in our laws so far as withdrawing from the Berne Convention and introducing piracy are concerned? Only 26, according to a correspondent of the Mail, out of 589 publishers in Canada.'

Copyright is supposed to be primarily intended for the protection of authors, but so far as any general expression of the opinion of Canadian authors has been formulated it is against the purpose of the agitation.

It was a Canadian literary man who wrote in 1899:

'The prime function of copyright is protection of intellectual labour. This proposal (of Canadian legislation) is one more attempt to introduce into copyright a factor for which the only precedent is the "manufacturing clause" of the United States—viz. the interests of manufacturers as distinct from mere protection of literary property.'

And another Canadian author who wrote in the same year:

'By interfering with the sale of authorised editions we restrict the liberty of the individual for the sake of protecting a local publisher. As British subjects we should be allowed to purchase whatever authorised edition we prefer regardless of the interests of any local publisher.'

'Our publishers seem to have overlooked the true purpose of copyright—viz. the protection of authors' rights—and, looking upon it as a question of publishers' rights, are urging a step which will complicate an already complicated question, and create a precedent which, if allowed by the other Colonies, will divide the Empire into separate States, each compelling the author to incur fresh expense and increase the difficulty he already experiences in the collection of his royalties.'

Moreover, it was the Canadian Authors' Society which sent over representatives to the Publishers' Congress in London in 1899, and there first promulgated the proposal which afterwards became law as the Canadian Act of 1900, and was incorporated by Lord Thring in the English Bill of 1900.

In short, Canadian authors see the enormous advantages offered to them by Imperial copyright, extending throughout the British Empire, and have no desire to risk the loss of this privilege for the sake of the commercial interests of the Canadian manufacturers.

One by one, all the genuine Canadian grievances have been removed by the Foreign Reprints Act, by the Act of 1875, by the Berne Convention Act of 1886-7, and by the Canadian Act of 1900. What is it which the agitators really require?

In 1872 the late Sir John Rose wrote:

'What Canada asks is concurrent publication (not restricted to Canadian materials and Canadian tradesmen, as do the United States), but only to insure a book of a kind suited to the wants of the community. The English publisher might do this himself by arrangement with agents in Canada, and would make little practical sacrifice by it, because the Canadian edition would be unsuited to English use.'

And yet in 1900 we find the Prime Minister of Canada, in the course of a debate in the House of Commons, saying:—

'In fact, I never knew of any divided opinion in this house as to the paramount power of Canada over the subject of copyright. These powers, however, as my hon. friend knows, are disputed by the English authorities, but Canada has always insisted on standing by its own rights.'

These two statements display a very wide and far reaching change of view in the course of thirty years. I will not attempt to trace the stages by which this change has come to pass, but will merely point out in support of the Imperial view that the Copyright Act of 1842 is still in force in Canada: that the Canadian Act of 1875 did not become law until it was confirmed by a special Imperial Act: that the Imperial Act of 1887 is in force in Canada in spite of certain protests on the part of the agitators, and, above all, that the highest Canadian Court of Appeal, in the words of Judge Proudfoot, decided in 1875 that there is 'nothing in the British North America Act of 1867 (Secs. 91-129 re copyright) conferring any greater powers in this respect on the Dominion and Provinces than were previously enjoyed by the Province of Canada. There is nothing indicating any intention of the Imperial Parliament to abdicate its power of legislation on matters of the kind.' (Smiles v. Belford.)

The new Bill which his Majesty's present Government announced in February 1901 has not yet been made public, but it is assumed that it will follow pretty closely the lines of the Bill which passed the House of Lords in 1899 and 1900.

This Bill has been before the Canadians for two years; it gives the widest possible powers for local copyright legislation to all self-governing Colonies; it embodies the Canadian Act of 1900, and, so far as I am aware, there is no specific provision in it to which exception is taken in Canada.

What the Canadian agitators want is to shake off all Imperial control in the matter, regardless of the interests of Canadian authors, and of the privileges which they share under the Imperial law.

What sort of legislation we might expect is shown by the abortive Canadian Act of 1889, the principle of which is thus described by one of Canada's own distinguished senators:

'Is it right that we as a Government should so frame our Act that we are going to rob our fellow subjects in Great Britain of the just right of their brain which is accorded by almost every intelligent nation in Europe as an inherent right to them, and the protection which they are giving and affording to them? We say, "We will not give you that protection; we will pirate your works and give our publishers leave and license to pirate them to any extent they choose subject to the percentage condition." . . . So far as the term "literary piracy" is concerned, it might be applied to the Act we are now passing, similar to the letters of marque that two centuries ago were issued to men like Sir Francis Drake upon the high seas. . . . civilisation is advancing since that date, and Sir Francis Drake and men of that stamp ran great risks to develop their enterprise. We propose to issue letters of marque to literary pirates without imposing any risk upon them, and give them all the profits which may accrue from it—but to the great demoralisation of Canadian writers and possibly readers.'

There is one other grievance which is often brought forward by the opponents of Imperial legislation: at one time it did inflict a hardship on Canadian printers and publishers, but I believe it is rapidly disappearing. It is this: when English publishers and authors sold the American rights of their books they too often disposed of the Canadian rights along with them, thus giving the American publisher the control, and most of the emoluments, of the Canadian sales.

I believe the origin of this practice was that until recent years there were but few houses in the Dominion of sufficient wealth and standing to compete for these purchases. When I first went to Canada, some twenty-six years ago, I was astonished to learn how few firms there were with which one could do substantial business. On several occasions after that my firm sent stereotype plates to Canada, and suffered not only pecuniary loss, but the loss of the plates into the bargain, by the failure or disappearance of those in whom we had trusted.

But all this has changed now. There are Canadian houses which bear favourable comparison with any others—all the world over—for enterprise and stability; confidence has returned, and the leading London publishers are doing their best to sell Canadian rights to Canadian and not to American firms. I would appeal to authors and to authors' agents to make this as far as possible a condition in their agreements.

There is a great future before this branch of the publishing business, and I sincerely trust that Canadian authors, and the leading Canadian publishers, will look to the benefits which must be derived from the acquisition of world-wide rights, rather than to the local interests of those who would, in respect of copyright legislation, cut off Canada from the British Empire.

QUEER QUESTIONS.

SIR,—I think the most curious and amusing incident I have experienced in connection with Bookselling was a lady walking into the shop and asking me, 'Have you Wings?' I replied, 'No, Madam,' and then the humour of the question dawned on her, and she walked out smiling.

BOOKSELLER'S ASSISTANT.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

SIR,—I have to complain of my advertisement not being inserted last week: may I ask why?

Yours truly,

SUBSCRIBER.

[It was addressed to the Editor instead of to the Manager, and, the Editor being away it was sent to him; hence the delay. Delay would be avoided if all advertisements were addressed to the Manager.—Ed.]

THE LAST OF THE BLUECOAT SCHOOL.

It was an estimable thought which prompted Alderman Sir George Faudel-Phillips, and the Deputies and Common Councilmen of the Ward of Farringdon Within, to invite their constituents and others interested in the foundation to take a last look yesterday afternoon at Christ's Hospital before its hoary walls disappear for ever. Lady Faudel-Phillips assisted her husband in the task of receiving in the Court Room the many hundred guests who gathered on this interesting occasion. Under the guidance of the Rev. E. H. Pearce, Vicar of Christ Church, an inspection was made of the school buildings, and an interesting account of the history of the 'religious, Royal, and ancient foundation of Christ's Hospital' was given. The antique plate in the possession of the school was also exhibited and described. Earlier in the day some of the yellow stockinged, bluecoated boys had taken last photographs of the building, which has now ceased for ever to echo with their cries.—Daily Graphic, April 24.

CURIOUS ITEMS OF BOOKBINDING.

It seems a somewhat surprising statement to make that eggs, condensed milk, olive oil, and vinegar are all used in the binding of books. Yet such is the case. The white of egg is used for 'sizing,' to cause the delicate ornamental gold-leaf to adhere to the leather. To make the 'sizing' perform its adhesive work even more delicately, a little milk is added; and to help further in the important work of adhesion, a coating of olive oil or diluted vinegar is sometimes applied to the leather. The expert who manages the immense bindery of Harper & Brothers said to a visitor who had gone there to watch the rush of work on the 'New Encyclopædia of United States History,' that he had seen wise old bookbinders use the light froth of ale as a coating over a binding of silk. The froth held the gold-leaf with perfect success, and did not stain the silk. Many of the old expert bookbinders have little secret methods of their own by which to produce peculiarly fine results, and these secrets they guard as jealously as the housewife does her favourite family recipes.—Publishers' Weekly.

THE R. D. BLACKMORE MEMORIAL.

Mr. Albert H. Whittin, who is very kindly interesting himself about this memorial in the United States, asks that the Fund may be kept open for two or three months longer. At present the Fund amounts to about £200, of which less than £20 is from America.

THE member of the Canadian Parliament who proposes to conquer the United States and annex it to Canada in six months is too sanguine. We don't believe it can be done in less than eight months.—Kansas City Journal.

TRADE CHANGES &c.

Messrs. Reeves & Turner's new address is 3 Bream's Buildings, the Incorporated Law Society's extension of buildings having compelled them to vacate the premises they have occupied for so many years past.

The important printing, bookselling, and stationery business of the late Mr. James Williamson, of Lincoln, has been sold by the executors to Mr. W. K. Morton, of Horncastle, Spilsby, and Sleaford. The valuation was made by Mr. Doyle, of Liverpool, for the vendors, and Mr. Burghes, of London, for the purchaser.

Mr. S. C. Brown, Kingston-on-Thames, has opened business at 47 Great Russell Street, London, W., under the name of S. C. Brown & Co., and are appointed London agents for Messrs. Otto Schulze & Co., Edinburgh.

Mr. S. H. Lazarus, late of 3 and 51 Booksellers' Row, and 264 Strand, W.C., has now taken permanent premises at 116 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

IN THE GRIP OF THE BRIGANDS.

Miss Stone's personal narrative of her six months' captivity.

NOTE.—The first two copies off the press of the Sunday Magazine for May (which will contain this article) have been graciously accepted by his Majesty the King and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. The royal commands have also been received that the Magazine shall, in each case, be sent regularly so long as Miss Stone's narrative is being published.

Miss Stone's work as a member of the American Mission in Turkey entailed constant journeys among the towns and villages of Macedonian Turkey, a hotbed of political discontent and open brigandage.

At the time of her capture she had been staying at Bansko, one of her centres, and was returning to Salonica, with Mrs. Tsilka, afterwards her fellow prisoner, Mrs. Tsilka's husband, and some of her fellow workers. As she subsequently learned, the brigands had long resolved on her capture, and all the while that she had been at Bansko had been everywhere dogging her footsteps. The first warning that the party had of approaching peril was an unexpected change of route by their native guide, undoubtedly in the interest of the brigands, which Miss Stone admits made her a little uneasy, though otherwise the party appear to have been totally unsuspecting of any treachery. So they proceeded happily on their way, until they arrived at a spot where the trail was broken by a ford:—

'An admirable spot for an ambush. But we had passed it safely so many times before that none of us thought of danger. Suddenly we were startled by a shout, a command in Turkish "Halt!" . . . Before any of us could say a word, armed men were swarming about us on all sides, seeming to have sprung from the hillside.'

Dreading what might be their fate, the captives were hurried up the mountain out of the reach of rescue. Nor was their next experience likely to reassure them. On their way up a poor Turkish traveller had chanced on them, and had been seized lest he should give the alarm. Now he was to suffer the consequences of his unwitting intrusion.

'Suddenly I heard rapidly approaching footsteps above us; then a cruel blow. The Turk whom the brigands had captured was driven past us, his arms pinioned behind him with a scarlet girdle. . . With tense nerves and a terrible fear in our hearts we saw him driven across the little opening where we sat and into the thicket beyond. Here my eyes refused to follow. Alas that my ears could not also have been closed that I might not have heard the horrible dagger thrusts and the death cry that followed.'

Shortly after this Miss Stone learnt that, with Mrs. Tsilka, she was to be separated from the rest of their party. Without explanation, without leave taking, they were borne away alone, weary and worn with doubt, all through the night further into the wilderness. At last they learned, from chance fragments of the brigands' conversation, the reason of their capture:

'I did not hear the remark, but the answer was, "Think how many liras." This gave me my first inkling of the fact that we had been taken for ransom. Still I dared not believe that this was the case, for I was yet under the spell of the horrible fear that our captors would murder us as they had their first victim.'

The brigands were in their way not unkindly disposed to their prisoners, readily according them such little comforts as lay within their power to confer. One of them even presented Miss Stone with a bunch of wild flowers, a little attention which she tells us

'touched us beyond anything else, and made hope spring up in our hearts, that men who could thus care to supply us not only with the necessities of life, but even with flowers, could not be bent on murdering us.'

Still they travelled on, ready to drop with fatigue, along the roughest of trails, and through thickets where the low branches threatened to sweep them from their horses, until, towards the end of their second night, they reached their first resting place:—

'There they led us to a doorway, and through some dark outer space into a small inner room with one small barred window. A light was brought, and, after the brigands had spread down some cloaks for us, we were left to ourselves. The horror of a great fear fell upon us. What could they not do to us in that dark hidden spot? Why had they brought us thither? If we should be killed now, no one in the world would know our fate.

Then followed a trying interview with the leaders of the band, the outcome of which was the fixing of the ladies' ransom at £25,000, with the alternative of their being shot.

CHARGE OF OBTAINING BOOKS.

Walter Hubert D'Este, thirty-four, was found guilty of having obtained two books, value £5, by means of false pretences, from Herbert Batsford, a bookseller and publisher, of Holborn.

D'Este obtained the books by representing himself as a journalist in a position to review them for the Admiralty and Horse Guards Gazette, a journal which had ceased to exist more than a year ago, and to which the prisoner had been connected as a wrapper-addressing hand. Detective-Sergt. Callaghan said D'Este had been living by fraud since 1897. In that year he got possession of a house at Norwood. As a prospective tenant he was entrusted with the keys of the residence, which he refused to vacate for some considerable time. He furnished it upon the hire system, and defrauded the tradesmen in the neighbourhood by getting them to supply goods for which payment was not forthcoming. In November 1898 D'Este was charged at the Sessions with frauds by means of worthless cheques, but the prosecution was abandoned with the consent of the court, D'Este paying back the amount involved. Afterwards he was arrested for stealing 5,000 £1 shares in a mining concern, but he was discharged. Since then he has been connected with criminals.

The Judge ordered D'Este nine months' imprisonment.—Daily Chronicle, April 24. (See also P.C. of April 19.)

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Sir David Wilkie,' by Lord Ronald Sutherland Gower, F.S.A. We must confess that we have not found this account of the great Scotch painter's life particularly interesting; for the man himself, genius though he undoubtedly was, had little charm and practically no culture. His life was uneventful, his character neither complex nor deep, and his career a monotonous succession of triumphs. Lord Gower's critical remarks, however, are valuable, and the forty illustrations give the reader an excellent idea of the scope and variety of Wilkie's genius. He was undoubtedly at his best in his paintings of Scottish rural and family life, and though we do not concur with Carlyle's criticism of the picture representing John Knox preaching, that historically it is 'of an ignorance altogether abject,' yet we think many of his historical works lack the imaginative force and directness necessary to make them live. The chronological list of Wilkie's works, and the catalogue of paintings arranged according to the galleries in which they are contained, are indispensable for all students of the master, and Lord Gower is to be praised for the thoroughness and ability of his little work.

From The Cambridge University Press.—'The Metamorphoses of Ovid,' Book VIII., edited, with introduction, notes, vocabulary, and index, by W. C. Summers, M.A.; 'The Iliad of Homer,' Books IX. and X., edited, with introduction and notes, by J. C. Lawson, M.A.; 'Prince Eugen von Savoyen,' edited, with introduction, notes, and index, by E. C. Quiggin, M.A., Ph.D. The above volumes are all included in the 'Pitt Press Series,' and maintain the standard attained by the earlier volumes.

From the same.—'The Anabasis of Xenophon,' Book I., edited, with introduction, notes, and vocabulary, by G. M. Edwards, M.A.; 'The Fables of Phædrus,' Books I. and II., edited, with introduction, notes, and vocabulary, by J. H. Flather, M.A.; Cæsar's 'De Bello Gallico,' Book I., edited, with notes and vocabulary, by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A. The 'Cambridge Series of Classics' intended for use in schools and training colleges is excellent, the notes being complete and easily understood.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Love's Cradle, and other Papers,' by Thomas Newbigging. There is nothing remarkable about these papers, though they are all fairly interesting. They convey the impression of having been originally prepared for some literary club, but nothing is said on the title-page to substantiate the idea. 'Love's Cradle,' the first of the essays, treats of the times of the Troubadours, a subject of much romantic interest and great wealth of colouring, but Mr. Newbigging never seems to rise to the opportunities of his theme. He quotes largely from the well-known story of Guillem Cabestaing and the Lady Marguerita, who, it will be remembered, was deceived by her infuriated husband into eating the heart of her dead lover, and afterwards committed suicide from the castle walls. Many of the Troubadours, he points out, were cultured wastrels, both rich and poor; and wastrels of either class, he rather sententiously remarks, 'have their place in the scheme of things and they appeal to the romantic and artistic faculties in our nature.' The titles of the other and shorter papers are 'A Word for the Waits,' 'Chivalry,' 'The Element of Farce in the Mystery and Miracle Plays,' 'The Gladiators and the Gladiatorial Spirit,' and 'Fuimus Redivivus.'

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Bonds of Steel,' by J. S. Fletcher. This is a novel, neither particularly well constructed nor particularly well written, which yet excites a certain amount of interest because of the debatable matter it contains. Throughout its pages there are frequent contemptuous references to Mrs. Grundy and the opinions that good lady is supposed to hold. But inasmuch as there is no Mrs. Grundy, that fictitious but none the less formidable character being represented by the older and more experienced heads of the community as contrasted with the younger and hotter bloods—and indeed each moral controversialist forming a Mrs. Grundy for himself, and pounding her poor body into a pulpless mass—it follows as a matter of course that there are infinite opportunities for argument. In Mr. Fletcher's story a young girl of what we may term advanced ideas goes unaccompanied on a tour in the Lake District. Here she meets a man to whom, on account of his general culture and tone of thought, she feels strangely attracted. Their holiday-making for the future is carried on in company. Almost needless to say, her new acquaintance is a married man, and has an uncongenial wife. These things always turn out so, and Mrs. Grundy is anathematised because she refuses to recognise the hardships of the situation. Matters are further complicated in the present case, because Holme Rosse is a celebrated novelist, with all a novelist's tendency (as portrayed in minor fiction) to the sentimental. Hope Temple, his new friend, encourages him to write a more ambitious, outspoken work than anything he has yet attempted. Much general reference is made to this book, but its exact character we are not permitted to know. At any rate, it shocks all Rosse's relatives, and his wife takes refuge with her father. There is a boy of the marriage whom Rosse dearly loves. On his death an opportunity for reconciliation occurs, but, Mrs. Rosse refusing, the husband goes over entirely to Hope Temple. We have now said enough to indicate the nature of the story; more the reader must learn from the book itself.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'One Frail Woman and Four Queer Men: Farce and Drama,' by Edgumbe Staley. We are afraid we can say nothing in praise of this collection of short stories, which the blunders of the printer have rendered still further unsatisfactory. In the first, a clergyman, on going down to inspect a country living which he has been offered, finds that one of the conditions is that he shall marry the beneficiary, a lady of extremely free and easy manners, who has been married, under very unorthodox circumstances, three times already, and indeed is not quite certain her last husband is dead. Following this highly unconventional episode, we have the story of a loutish young scion of the nobility in the country, to whom another clergyman goes as tutor; the account of a curious member of the episcopal bench who is always saying, 'I'm your Bishop, you know!'; and two narratives that are sufficiently strongly coloured to merit thoroughly the title of drama. Mr. Staley views life through distorted spectacles.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett, Limited.—'Friends that Fail Not: Light Essays concerning Books,' by Cecil Headlam. In a genial, unpretentious way the papers comprising this volume are extremely fascinating. The author writes with such pleasant familiarity that we feel more as if we were listening to the conversation of a friend on the other side of the hearthrug than reading the printed comments of a stranger. Only we should like to reply to him. When he discourses so agreeably on coincidences as the groundwork of fiction, the humours of dictionaries, the endings of books, false pathos, quotations, the joys of writing, street cries, and so forth, there are many little points that crop up whereon we should like to relate our experiences and opinions. Surely no greater testimony could be adduced to the interest of these essays. They are not deep, they might almost be termed trifling, but they have that indefinable charm of arousing the reader's interest and leading his mind into very pleasant channels of thought which far more important volumes are often totally destitute of. We are grateful to Mr. Headlam for a very enjoyable hour spent in his company.

From Messrs. Isbister & Company, Limited.—'Ca's, and All About Them,' by Frances Simpson. With twenty-four illustrations. This useful and beautifully illustrated handbook contains all that owners or breeders need to know about that most graceful domestic pet, the cat, without whose presence the home fireside lacks its chief ornament. Such an intimate knowledge of the feline race can only have been gained by many years' experience, which the writer tells us she has had. She furthermore states she has a real love for cats, without which she does not believe anyone can successfully breed and exhibit them. Of the truth of this we are firmly convinced. Indeed, it is because of the want of such love that so many of those poor creatures, who are simply regarded as 'the harmless, necessary cat,' return to the old home when their cold-hearted owners leave it. Having testified to the usefulness of this book and the sympathetic spirit it displays, we must not omit to call attention to the illustrations, which are uniformly admirable—from the frontispiece, a portrait of the fair author with her superb Silver Male 'Cambyes,' in her arms, to the very last, which shows us her lovely Blue Kitten 'Bonnie Boy.' This picture gallery affords a delightful feast for the eye of amateurs of cats, whose gratitude Miss Simpson has most certainly earned by this capital book, which they will warmly appreciate, although it may be 'caviare to the general.'

From the same.—'Life on the Stage,' by Clara Morris. To Miss Morris the stage is the world, and life on the stage is the only life worth living. And she is right—she has overturned our convictions, and left us convinced. Her account of her life is brimful of records of untiring energy, indomitable perseverance, and deliciously naive anecdotes about herself. As an American actress of eminence, she has met everyone worth knowing on the other side of the Atlantic, and being a woman of enthusiasms (e.g., she calls the late Shakespearean Vandal, Mr. Augustin Daly, 'a great man'), she stints not her praise nor does she withhold her Homeric panegyrics. In a word, her book should be read, especially by those to whom actresses are anathema. If Miss Morris does not convince them of their uncharitableness, no one will.

From Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh.—Volume IV. of the excellent series of 'Manuals of Employments for Educated Women,' treats of the important subject of 'Medicine,' and is from the pen of the general editress of the series, Miss Christabel Osborn. It enters very thoroughly into the minutiae of the subject, and supplies much useful information in regard to the different medical schools where women students are admitted, the various kinds of degree or diploma, cost of training, &c. Not the least interesting and valuable portion of the Manual is that dealing with 'The Field of Work.' Young women who are contemplating joining the medical profession will find Miss Osborn's little book an admirable source of information and advice.

From Mr. John Long.—'Fair Rosalind,' by J. E. Muddock. Here we are whisked back to the days of Henry VIII., and hustled along at a furious rate through many dramatic scenes. Mr. Muddock's pen is vivid, and delights in the unexpected. His knowledge of the times of which he writes is but superficial, but he makes them live. Stirring incident, descriptions of the plottings of rival statesmen, and the buoyant style of the author make this book very readable; it is not a fine or a notable work, but it is distinctly fresh, and decidedly above the average.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Les Histoires de Tante,' by R. D'Alissas (M. & K. Roget), with notes and vocabulary by the authors. This volume of short stories is intended for beginners in French. It is well edited, and has several illustrations.

From the same.—'Object Lessons for Rural Schools,' by Vincent T. Murché, F.R.G.S., Headmaster of Boundary Lane Board School, Camberwell. For Senior Classes.—This volume forms one of a series of Manuals which the publishers have undertaken in order to meet the requirements of the Board of Education as formulated in the Circular to Managers and Teachers of Rural Elementary Schools, whereby attention is called to the importance of making the education in the village school more consonant with the environment of the scholars than is usually the case, and especially of encouraging the children to gain an intelligent knowledge of the common things that surround them in the country. This excellent suggestion Mr. Murché, himself an old rural teacher, has firmly grasped and acted upon in the volume *before us, which covers much of the ground indicated in the Circular. The Manual contains forty-three lessons on the Farm and Garden in the different seasons of the year; on ferns, flowers, plants, and trees, and on the farmer's pests and friends. Numerous and accurate illustrations and diagrams enhance the value of this useful and interesting text-book.

From the same.—'Rural Readers: Senior,' by Vincent T. Murché, F.R.G.S. Here we again meet Mr. Murché in a pleasingly written and sumptuously illustrated Reader to be used in conjunction with his Object Lesson Manuals. Its object is to further the valuable suggestion of the Board of Education that the teacher should seek to develop in every boy and girl that habit of inquiry so natural to children. The Board also suggests that children's eyes should be trained to recognise plants and insects, that their hands should be trained to practical dexterities of rural life, and to handle the simpler farm and garden tools. Charles Dickens never dreamt of such a sensible Board as this; although Mr. Squeers had some inkling of such training, as may be read in the eighth chapter of 'Nicholas Nickleby,' treating 'Of the Domestic Economy of Dotheboy's Hall.' Mr. Murché has done his best to make the subjects dealt with in his Readers interesting to learners, and Messrs. Macmillan have spared no pains nor expense in their production.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'Charles Armstrong Fox Memorials,' gathered by Sophia M. Nugent. The two portraits of the Rev. Charles Fox, who for twenty-five years faithfully ministered to the worshippers at Eaton Chapel, Eaton Square, show us the features of a firm yet genial and acutely intellectual man. His father was curate-in-charge of Woodstone, near Peterborough, and Charles was born in the Rectory, November 24, 1836. On his father being appointed gaol chaplain at Leicester, the boy was sent to the Collegiate School there, where he gained a scholarship at St. John's College, Cambridge, which he entered in 1854. There he developed an insatiable thirst for acquiring knowledge, and the precarious state of his father's health spurred him on to take pupils, both during term and vacation. Unfortunately this conscientious labour had injurious effects. His father died in 1856, and in 1858 he graduated B.A., and on March 20, 1859, was ordained deacon to the curacy of West Exe, Devon. The vicar held two livings, and gave his curate sole charge of Loxbeare, near Tiverton, with the use of the new rectory, whither he brought his wife. Here he worked hard, was beloved, and happy; but the overstrain of his undergraduate days brought on frequent attacks of congestion of the brain; and he was forced to resign his curacy, and rest from ministerial labour for eight years, until, being restored to better health, he took priest's orders in 1872, and was appointed evening lecturer at St. Paul's, Tiverton. At Tiverton his preaching was so highly appreciated that the following year he was invited to St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, London, where he remained from November 1873 to September 1874, when the trustees of the proprietary Chapel in Eaton Square appointed him minister in succession to the Rev. S. Minton. There he laboured successfully until his health gave way in 1898, and he died December 5, 1900. Of him the present Bishop of Durham writes: 'I never in my life knew a man so unspoiled by publicity. . . . I have never known a man, hardly have I known a woman, whose sympathy was more perfect alike in its concentration and its tender depth.' This and much more about this gifted and amiable man, and no mean poet, as many of his verses serve to show, will be found in this beautiful memorial volume.

From Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.—

'Little Poems for Little People,' chiefly by Edward Shirley. A collection of pieces, for reading or recitation by the little ones in the nursery, the like of which seldom comes under our notice; for, although these pieces vary greatly in their themes, and some are gay while others are grave, they are all pleasing and likely to be hailed with rapture by those for whom they are written. As a sample of the graver sort we select the first and last verses of 'Dumb Friends,' the moral of which is excellent:

The horse says 'Neigh,' but he doesn't mean
'No';

If he only could speak he'd tell you so.

He'll tug and strain at the heavy cart,

And do his work with a willing heart;

But you, in your turn, must do your part,

And treat him well.

So let us be kind to the animals all,

Who live in the field, the farmyard, and stall;

For they are our friends, our helpers too—

They willingly work for us all the year through.

Let us never forget to give them their due,
And treat them well.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Limited.—

'Tregarthen's Wife: a Cornish Story,' by Fred. M. White, with fifteen illustrations. We have stayed for some time in Cornwall and have been to Tintagel, but never have we met with so strange a person as Tregarthen, nor heard of an isle in the Cornish seas so strangely ruled as 'the Island of Tregarthen, which,' Mr. White says, 'is a long green luscious slice from the mainland some eight miles long by five in width,' situated not many miles from Tintagel. Two American ladies—Miss Mary Blenkiron, the lovely and only daughter of the late Cyrus Blenkiron, millionaire, of Pittsburg, Pa., and Miss Miriam Murch, a kindly but strong-minded woman of forty, who owns three flourishing dailies all built up by herself—land one day on this island. Miss Murch tells her friend: 'The people here are a form (sic) of Christian Commonwealth, a self-supporting community, who pay no rent or dues of any kind and hold communication with nobody. Tourists are rigidly excluded.' This information is speedily confirmed by Tregarthen himself, a tall thin man about forty, with a refined dreamy face and eyes like the sea, but whose hair is quite white. 'He bowed with the grace of courts and palaces. He was a Louis, a Charles, a Bayard, and a troubadour at the same time.' Courtly as are his manners, he flatly declares that no strangers are allowed within the dominion of Tregarthen, that he is King there, and could send them to prison without the House of Commons having the right to interfere. Whereupon Miss Blenkiron claims to be received on the island as a descendant of Amyas Blenkiron of Tregarthen, and says she possesses a diary written by an ancestress, Marcia Blenkiron, containing incidents in the island's history which Tregarthen thought were known only to himself. Then he becomes interested. When, however, the ladies are told, in reply to their inquiries as to how the natives subsist, that whenever the fishing industry and flower culture fail the natives are on the verge of starvation, and that there is no help for it, and Miss Murch suggests that employment might be found for the women, Tregarthen says he would sooner cut off his right hand than permit such a thing. He then orders them to the Sanctuary, formerly a monastery and now a kind of poor house. While there they find that there are two women, Naomi and Ruth, who can still make the Spanish lace, the making of which had been taught to the natives by survivors from the wreck of one of the Armada galleons. This would profitably employ the women. But Tregarthen had prohibited the making or selling of it, had destroyed all the pillows and bobbins save Ruth's, and her he resolves to marry. How the two Americans plot to thwart Tregarthen, what success attends their enterprise, and also their matrimonial scheme, which is transcendently Transatlantic, will be found circumstantially related in this amusing if improbable story, the dramatic effect of which is enhanced by the clever illustrations.

From James Nisbet & Co., Ltd.—'Cashiered, and other War Tales,' by Andrew Balfour.

In a preliminary note the author states that the ten stories of African campaigning contained in this volume now appear for the first time, with the exception of that one giving the title to the book, which made its first appearance in Chambers's Journal. 'Cashiered' is a well-told story of a boy lieutenant, fresh from Sandhurst, who successfully defends a stockade and fort in West Africa against repeated attacks from hordes of savages, and is told by the Major who relieves him that he deserves the D.S.O. But, being offered his choice of returning to the coast or accompanying the expedition to relieve another fort, he chooses the latter alternative; and, spite of premonitory signs of fever and the warnings of a wounded surgeon, goes, and, under the influence of malaria, refuses to obey the order to take a bridge, and is dismissed the service. However, he recovers, changes his name, and re-enlists for service in South Africa, where he retrieves his character at the cost of his life. There are other good stories, such as 'The Aasvogels' (Birds of Prey), in which the terrible end of a robber of the dead and wounded on the battle-field is vividly described; 'A Chaplain of the Forces,' the tragi-comic story of an unfit army chaplain; 'The Power of the Vrouw,' a sad tale of the son of an English officer, who, having married a Dutch farmer's daughter, is the cause of his own father's death, after the latter has cleverly and bravely out-generalled the Burghers. This enthralling volume will delight all who gladly read tales of the camp and battle-field.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

'Centennial Survey of Foreign Missions: a Statistical Supplement to "Christian Missions and Social Progress," being a Conspectus of the Achievements and Results of Evangelical Missions in all Lands at the close of the Nineteenth Century,' by the Rev. James S. Dennis, D.D. The preparation of this work, we can quite understand, must have involved a vast expenditure of time and labour, and we are not surprised to be told by the publishers that the cost of production can never be repaid, though this is a form of recommendation that obviously originates from the other side of the Atlantic, whence the book has its source. In his preface the author says that 'the critical, censorious, and sometimes frankly unfriendly attitude of many persons towards missions is usually the result of ignorance.' This may or may not be so, but at least the reader will gather a very fair idea of their far-reaching influence and the magnitude of their undertakings from the present volume. It is divided into nine principal sections, respectively treating of the evangelistic, the educational, the literary, the medical, the philanthropic, and the cultural missions, the organisations for the extension of knowledge and the furtherance of national, social, moral, and religious reform, the missionary training institutions, and mission steamers and ships. Following these are a number of summaries excellently condensing the previous statements, to be again followed by a 'Directory of Foreign Mission Societies,' showing the progress of work in America, Europe, Asia, Australasia, and Oceania and Africa. Finally, in an appendix, we have a general index of subjects, an index of missionary societies, an index of proper names, and an index of maps. The volume affords an excellent survey of mission work at home and abroad, and should be found deeply interesting by all who are concerned in this form of Christian endeavour.

From Messrs. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—

'The Theft of a Heart,' by Lilius Campbell Davidson. We wonder whether the author of this story ever read Mrs. Edwardes's 'Steven Lawrence, Yeoman.' In reading her work we have frequently been reminded of this novel. Not that the idea is exactly the same, but there are certainly points of similarity. In each case the hero is led through deception to marry a woman for whom he has no real affection, his heart being safe at the time in the keeping of another. It is a little difficult, however, to conceive anyone so exceedingly obtuse as Oswald Brackenbury, the leading character of Miss Davidson's story. Surely anyone not exactly an idiot would have detected the imposition played upon him long before marriage. The only excuse that can be made for him is that some months previously he had received a blow from a gondolier in Venice which had strangely rendered him blind, and at the same time had probably disordered something more than his eyesight. While in this state—that is, a state of blindness—he had fallen in love with a highly attractive girl who had held out hopes that she would be his if the results of an impending operation were satisfactory; indeed, she would have been his under any circumstances had he pressed his suit, but of course the foolish young man, being blind and in love, did not know this. The operation over and his eyesight restored, he joyfully went to seek his beloved, but was met instead by her cousin, who, smitten by his manly beauty, unscrupulously passed herself off as the rightful party. The lover thought there was something strange about the matter—wished almost that he had remained blind if this was to be the result of his recovery—but like a hero accepted the situation, and after some still more puzzling experiences was married. Then appeared Nemesis, and ultimately the whole horrid deception was disclosed. The wretched wife had by this time cultivated a genuine affection for her husband, but a serious illness kindly removed her, paving the way for the union of those true hearts, the hero and the object of his affection.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Nora Lester,' by Anna Howarth. This is a somewhat old-fashioned tale, relying on coincidence for its chief interest. Miss Howarth, however, writes with elaborate attention to detail, and her character studies are well thought out, if not very original. We admire her study of Gronow Neilson—the only son of a drunkard, who works himself up from a penniless youth to an honourable position in life. The plot is conventionally improbable, but the book is worth reading on account of its psychological insight.

From the same.—'Gentleman Garnet,' by Harry B. Vogel. Mr. Vogel is not precisely a stylist, but he has a graphic pen and invariably seizes on the salient points of any incident, character, or scenery he is describing. This tale of old Tasmania has much in it that it is painful to read. The convict settlement of Hobart Town in 1838 is realised with a keen sense of the suffering and degradation inflicted on the inhabitants, and though the author's sympathy for the downtrodden and ill-treated is expressed more by innuendo than by definite statement, yet he has power to draw tears and make the reader boil with indignation. His story rattles along with gusto, and though his characters are not the most respectable in the world, they are, nevertheless, well drawn and alive.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'Denmark, Past and Present,' by Margaret Thomas. Intending visitors to Denmark cannot do better than consult Miss Thomas's pages: her book is half-guide, half-history, and wholly a companion. She says just the things that a friend at your elbow knowing the ground would say when he thought you were missing something you ought to see. She is not tiresomely informing, dealing out information without tact or discrimination; on the contrary, she knows just when to be chatty and when to be serious. Her book is complete without being over-burdened by unnecessary trifles; and the numerous illustrations are first-rate. The only complaint we have to make is that the binding is, well—hideous.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Froissart's Modern Chronicles,' told and pictured by F. Carruthers Gould. The inexhaustible humour of the author and artist find a congenial subject of treatment in this volume. The chronicles are dryly written in the stilted artificial manner of the fourteenth century, as so admirably exemplified in the work of Sir John Froissart, while the illustrations comically hit off the personal attributes of the great political leaders without grossly misrepresenting them. Nothing could be better than 'O'Brien refuseth to wear English breeches,' 'The Marquess of Salisbury (From a Stained-Glass Window),' 'Sir Joseph de Birmingham demandeth places for his son and others,' 'A Canterbury Pilgrim,' 'Sir Cecil de Kimberley and his Apple Cart,' and 'Ploughing'; but, indeed, all the pictures are touched with an exquisite satire. Of the book itself some idea may be gathered from the headings of the chapters, which are respectively: 'The Question of the Governance of Ireland,' 'Sir Stuart de Parnell and the Battle of Home Rule,' 'The Governance of the Buffs,' 'The Battle of Ninety-five,' 'The Governance of the Blues,' 'The Evil Fortune of the Buffs,' 'The Affairs of South Africa and other Matters,' 'The Death of Sir Gladstone le Grand,' 'The Affairs of the Church,' 'The War in South Africa,' 'The Battle of Nineteen Hundred,' and 'The Earl of Durdans.' There is many a hearty, unmalicious laugh in the book, and it is certain to be greatly enjoyed.

From the same.—'The Aspirate,' by the Rev. Geoffrey Hill. Mr. Hill's little volume is full of deep learning, relieved by frequent flashes of humour. He has studied his subject with enthusiasm, and the result is an essay of considerable educational value. In it the author traces the history of the aspirate, examines its position in foreign languages, and explains its influence on our modern speech. His work is the only one we know on the subject, and it is likely to remain a standard book for many years to come.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Last Infirmary,' by Thomas A. Lewis. The most prominent character in this novel is an individual of the Pecksniffian order who poses as an authority on botany, but is really indebted for all his information to his assistant, Tom Horner, who has as much veneration for his patron as the other Tom, whose surname was Pinch, had for the hypocritical architect. Sylvester Robb and Tom Horner are writing a book together—that is, the latter is doing the entire work and the former taking all the glory of it; and it is thus that Robb speaks of the matter: 'Thomas,' he added, turning towards that modest sharer of his labours, 'here is Mr. Salmon himself, the honorary secretary of our Society, whom I have brought with me at last to see with his own eyes, and tell others, Thomas, tell others what they might otherwise refuse to believe, that a very large part of the mere manual labour of the book will be yours, not mine. For I wish it to be known. Thomas, I wish it to be known that only the conception and plan of the work, that which will stamp it as an original production unlike all others, will emanate from me, who have not time, as a matter of fact, to fully execute my own ideas in a branch of science so far removed from that to which I have devoted the best years of my life.' It is not alone in science, moreover, that Sylvester Robb, F.S.A., has fattened on the researches of others. He has made a name and fortune in business at the expense of a clerk who is now confined in a lunatic asylum, from which there is little chance of his emerging if Robb has his way. How all these matters are cleared up it is the purpose of the story to tell. It is a little heavy in places, and perhaps not very dexterously constructed, but there are many well-drawn characters in the book who will sufficiently enlist the interest of the reader.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns, and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

From MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS

A FOREIGN VIEW OF ENGLAND IN THE Reigns of George I. and George II. Translated by Madame van MUYDEN. With a Photogravure Plate and many other Illustrations. Large crown 8vo. 10s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

An account of London and England written during the years 1725-1729, by Monsieur César de Saussure, a descendant of the French family of that name, who came over to this country for an educational visit, and wrote a continuous and detailed account of what he saw and did.

TEN THOUSAND MILES IN PERSIA: a Record of Eight Years' constant Travel in Eastern and Southern Iran. With special reference to the Geography and History of the Country as well as to its Commercial Resources, the Opening up of Trade Routes, and to the Journeys of Alexander the Great and Marco Polo. By Major PERCY MOLESWORTH SYKES (Queen's Bays), H.M. Consul at Kerman, awarded Silver Medal by the Society of Arts, 1897, the Back Grant in 1899, and the Gold Medal in 1902 by the Royal Geographical Society. With Maps and many Illustrations. Medium 8vo. 25s. net. [Ready next week.]

SAYAGE ISLAND: an Account of a Mission to Niue and Tonga in the Pacific Ocean. By BASIL THOMSON, lately H.M. Special Commissioner, Governor of Dartmoor Prison. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

DANGEROUS TRADES: the Historical, Social, and Legal Aspects of Industrial Occupations as affecting Public Health. By a number of Experts. Edited by Dr. T. OLIVER, M.A., M.D., F.R.C.P., Medical Expert on the White Lead, Dangerous Trades, Pottery, and Lucifer Match Committees of the Home Office; Professor of Physiology, University of Durham; Physician to the Royal Infirmary, Newcastle-on-Tyne. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 25s. net. [Just out.]

PRACTICAL LEGISLATION. Instructions for Drafting Acts of Parliament, and for the Composition of other Business Documents, with an Introduction giving some Personal Reminiscences of the Life of a Parliamentary Draughtsman, with some Notices of the Mode of Transacting Parliamentary Business, by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli. By Lord THRING, K.C.B. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

NOTES ON FORTIFICATION: with a Synoptical Chart. By Major B. R. WARD, R.E. Demy 8vo. 5s. net. [Ready next week.]

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLMASTER: a Commentary on the Aims and Methods of an Assistant Master in a Public School. By A. C. BENSON, of Eton College. Crown 8vo. 5s. net. [Ready immediately.]

EDUCATION AND EMPIRE: Addresses on Topics of the Day. By R. B. HALDANE, K.C., M.P., LL.D. Crown 8vo. 5s. net. [Ready immediately.]

SPANISH GRAMMAR: with Exercises, Vocabularies, and Materials for Conversation. PART I.—Nouns, Adjectives, Pronouns, &c. PART II.—Verbs, &c., with Copious Vocabularies. By Don FERNANDO DE ARTEAGA, Taylorian Teacher of Spanish in the University of Oxford. Two vols. crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. [Ready immediately.]

This book has in the main been formed on the plan of Sir Wm. Smith's well-known and deservedly popular 'Principia Latina, Part I.' It possesses, however, one new feature which is as novel as it is likely to prove valuable to the student who uses the book. English people, for the most part, who set themselves to learn Spanish, are not children, but either would-be-travellers in the country, students of its literature, or persons engaged in commerce with Spain or Spanish-speaking countries. It has therefore been the aim of the Editor throughout to avoid the old-fashioned Ollendorfen sentences in illustration of the grammar, and instead to make use of phrases and expressions which are likely to prove of practical use to the traveller and the man of business.

CUCHULAIN OF MUIRTHEMNE: the Story of the Men of the Red Branch of Ulster. Arranged and put into English by Lady GREGORY. With an Introduction by W. B. YEATS. Large crown 8vo. 6s. net. [Just out.]

WE ARE SEVEN: Half-hours on the Stage, Grave and Gay. By HAMILTON AIDÉ, Author of 'The Snares of the World.' Crown 8vo. 4s. net. [Just out.]

A NEW WORK OF FICTION.

THE LIFE OF JOHN WILLIAM WALSH, F.S.A. Edited, with an Introduction, by MONTGOMERY CARMICHAEL, Author of 'In Tuscany' &c. Crown 8vo. 6s. net. [Just out.]

This story, the scene of which is laid in Tuscany and Umbria, purports to be told by the scholar's son, and while dealing largely with matters of purely human interest, will be found to contain much relating to Franciscan studies and the deeper side of Roman Catholic Mysticism.

TWO NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE SHADOWY THIRD. By HORACE ANNESLEY VACHELL. Author of 'John Charity' &c. [Just out.]

THE VALLEY OF DECISION. By EDITH WHARTON, Author of 'A Gift from the Grave,' 'Crucial Instances,' &c. [Just out.]

'... the promise of earlier work is fulfilled. . . . It is as if a singer with a beautiful voice but an uncertain ear had trained herself at last to sing dead in tune. . . . As in "Wilhelm Meister," of the pianissimo charm of which we are often reminded, there are endless episodes, and these are so delightful that we forget the hero altogether. The fascinating tale of Mirandolina might woo a gentleman to forget his dinner, and a lady her afternoon tea. . . . everywhere there are words that arrest and hold us—words that we long to keep—"a vision of waste riches adrift on the dim seas of chance."—TIMES.

JAMES CHALMERS

JUST READY. Large crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

His Autobiography and Letters.

BY RICHARD LOVETT, M.A.
Author of 'James Gilmour' &c.

With 2 Photogravure Portraits, Maps, and 6 other Portraits from Photographs.

This is the only authentic and complete life of the great New Guinea Missionary. The effort of the biographer has been to depict the man as he was, in thought, in deed, in views of life, in passionate love for Jesus Christ, and in quenchless enthusiasm for the salvation of New Guinea's degraded savages, in his self-sacrificing life, and in his heroic death.

BOOKS BY JAMES CHALMERS.

PIONEERING IN NEW GUINEA.

Revised Edition, with Additional Chapters. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

'An astounding story of Christian pluck, tact, and patience. The situations are sparklingly dramatic, yet the story is told simply, modestly, manfully.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

WORK AND ADVENTURE IN NEW GUINEA.

New Edition, revised, and with much new and important matter, and 7 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Recent Tales

Second Edition, completing 15,000 Copies. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

The AWAKENING of ANTHONY WEIR.

By SILAS K. HOCKING. Illustrated by HAROLD COPPING.

'The best story which Mr. Silas K. Hocking has written for many a day—in my opinion one of the best stories he has ever written. Whoever desires to read a tale that is at once interesting and elevating should procure "The Awakening of Anthony Weir."—CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.
'A careful study of the mental evolution of a man who becomes a minister with a strong vein of worldliness in his nature.'—LITERATURE.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE GOLD THAT PERISHETH.

By DAVID LYALL, Author of 'The Land of the Leal' &c.

'An interesting story.'—GUARDIAN.
'Mr. David Lyall has made a strong story, and one well suited to drive home a moral. From the first chapter, in which a ruined merchant dies by his own hand, to the last, in which that man's son is rewarded for his courage and fortitude by the rehabilitation of his father's memory, there is not a dull chapter.'—GLASGOW HERALD.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt and gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

THE WONDER-CHILD.

An Australian Story. By ETHEL TURNER (Mrs. CORLEWIS), Author of 'Seven Little Australians.'

'Ethel Turner's Australian stories are always good, and this is one of the best.'—ATHENÆUM.
'Full of life and incident.'—SCOTSMAN. 'Very interesting.'—GLOBE.
'A brilliant story.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.
'An exceedingly vivacious account of the joys and sorrows of an Australian family.'—GENTLEWOMAN.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

HEATHER'S MISTRESS.

By AMY LE FEUVRE, Author of 'Probable Sons,' 'Dwell Deep,' 'On the Edge of a Moor,' &c. With 15 Illustrations by J. S. CROMPTON.

'A capital and wholesome love-story.'—MANCHESTER COURIER.
'A pretty story, prettily got up.'—RECORD.
'Like all Miss Le Feuvre's stories, "Heather's Mistress" has a fine Christian tone, showing that even for those who are led astray by the world and suffer for it, God has a gracious welcome back. It is a story which young women especially might read with profit and pleasure.'—PRESBYTERIAN.

A NEW TALE BY AMY LE FEUVRE.

ODD MADE EVEN.

With 7 Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

This story is one more for young people and adults than for children, though all who have read 'Odd' will find delight in following her through her early womanhood.

THE GENERAL BOOK CATALOGUE

FOR THE RETAIL TRADE

26th Year of Issue.

This well-known Catalogue comprises the titles of such books as are generally found in the stock of a good retail bookseller, and also of many Standard Works, which, though not always to be found in his stock, ought to have a place in a representative List of English Works; a Copious Index also forms an important feature of the work. The Publisher of each book is shown by means of a Special Reference Key, which is supplied to Subscribers only.

It consists of about 150 pages, crown 8vo. and is supplied in SHEETS† (to SUBSCRIBERS only) at the following prices:—

For Quantities of 500 and upwards 20s. per 100. (Including Subscriber's own Title Page and Preface if required.)
For less Quantities 23s. per 100. (Subscriber's own Title Page and Preface, if required, 3s. per 100 extra.)

† If required, the Catalogue can be supplied done up in a wrapper.

'Messrs. Barnicott & Pearce's most useful Catalogue of Works in the various Departments of Literature, which is prepared for selling to booksellers in quantities, to save individual members of the trade the labour and expense of preparing a Catalogue of their own business alone.'—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO COLONIAL BOOKSELLERS

In order to adapt the GENERAL BOOK CATALOGUE as completely as possible to the requirements of Colonial Booksellers, the Publishers have pleasure in announcing that they will again issue a LIST OF BOOKS SPECIALLY PREPARED FOR THE COLONIAL TRADE, uniform with the GENERAL BOOK CATALOGUE, on the following terms:—

500 Copies for £1. 16s. 6d.

1,000 Copies for £3. 3s.

ALL ORDERS MUST BE RECEIVED ON OR BEFORE SEPTEMBER 30, 1902.

UNSTABLE AS WATER

By Mrs. J. H. NEEDELL,

Author of 'Stephen Ellicott's Daughter.'

Writing of 'Stephen Ellicott's Daughter,' the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone said:—'I am desirous to bear my humble testimony to the great ability and high aim of the work.'

Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

GRIPPED

By SILAS K. HOCKING.

'In every way worthy of Mr. Hocking, whose skill in the construction of a complicated plot, and its unravelling, is seen at its best. "Gripped" is an extremely well-written book, full of exciting incidents and with some fine character studies.'

5/- AN ANTARCTIC QUEEN

By CAPTAIN CHARLES CLARK.

Illustrated by J. B. GREENE. In crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

A splendid sea story for boys. Full of shipwrecks, storms, and peril and adventure by land and sea; how the hero escapes death from shipwreck, accident, and treachery of all kinds, and finally settles down in 'Antarctica,' after marrying the Antarctic Queen, is related in a most attractive and realistic style.

TRUE TO THE WATCHWORD

3/6 By EDGAR PICKERING.

Illustrated by LANCELOT SPEED. In crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

'Pleasant, brightly written, and full of incident is "True to the Watchword," and although a number of the characters have their place in Hume it is only indirectly historical, the main theme of the narrative being derived from the author's imagination. Events exciting and dramatic follow fast upon each other, and the reader is often brought in contact with the grim reality of battle.'

Heraldry: Ancient and Modern

Including BOUTELL'S HERALDRY.

Edited and Revised, with Additions,

By S. T. AVELING.

In compliance with repeated demands, it has been decided to re-issue this well-known manual. The work gives an account of the origin and progress of Heraldry, from the earliest times to the present day, and describes, in a simple yet interesting manner, the significance of heraldic symbols, from the badge of the chieftain to the insignia of the orders of chivalry. The book is copiously illustrated, and describes coats of arms, crests, monograms, seals and their appendages, and contains a carefully compiled glossary.

G. P. Putnam's Sons'

NEW BOOKS

THE SCOTCH-IRISH; or, The Scot in North Britain, North Ireland, and North America. By CHARLES A. HANNA. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, £2. 2s. net.

These volumes, which will probably be followed by later works giving a detailed history of Scotch-Irish families in America, include a brief history of Scotland from the earliest times to the beginning of the eighteenth century; an account of the plantation of Ulster by the Scotch in the time of James I., as taken from contemporary records; the 'Ragman Roll' of the land-owners of lowland Scotland in the time of the Bruce; extended accounts of the origin and location of the families of Scotland; an account of the derivation of Scottish surnames in Scotland and in Ireland; together with a consideration of the part the Scotch-Irish took in the colonisation, separation, and the final unification of the American Colonies.

A BANQUET BOOK. By CUYLER REYNOLDS. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. net.

The first half is devoted to a conveniently arranged compendium of quotations, witty and serious, for the convenience of anyone who has been called upon to arrange a toast-list, or prepare dinner cards, &c. This makes the volume of value as a handbook, and for many occasions other than banquets. The latter half is devoted to a chapter on important dinner details—such as the proper wines for the proper courses, and other facts concerning which a host is often doubtful and without a mentor to advise him. There is a chapter on the mixing of beverages (including cock-tails), and the concluding pages are filled with toasts of all sorts—new and old, verse and prose, solemn and frivolous.

THE SOCIAL EVIL. With Special Reference to Conditions existing in the City of New York. A Report prepared under the direction of the Committee of Fifteen. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s. net.

EDWARD PLANTAGENET (EDWARD I.), THE ENGLISH JUSTINIAN; or, the Making of the Common Law. By EDWARD JENKS, M.A., Author of 'Law and Politics in the Middle Ages.' Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s. ('Heroes of the Nations' Series.)

A BOOK OF SECRETS. With Studies in the Art of Self-Control. By HORATIO W. DRESSER, Author of 'Living by the Spirit,' 'The Christ Ideal,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

RICHARD WAGNER. By W. L. HENDERSON. Crown 8vo. half vellum, paper sides, gilt top, in box, 6s. net.

The purpose of this book is to supply Wagner lovers with a single work which shall meet all their needs. The author has told the story of Wagner's life, explained his artistic aims, given the history of each of his great works, examined its literary sources, shown how Wagner utilised them, surveyed the musical plan of each drama, and set forth the meaning and purpose of its principal ideas.

ROMANCE OF THE RENAISSANCE CHÂTEAUX. By ELIZABETH W. CHAMPNEY. Fully Illustrated. 8vo. cloth, gilt top, 15s. net.

There could be no pleasanter way of studying the history of France during the Renaissance than by reading the legends and traditions which cluster about the fortified homes of the period. Mrs. Champney has gathered these into a delightful volume.

ONE WORLD AT A TIME: a Contribution to the Incentives of Life. By Rev. THOS. R. SLICER. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.

THE HOME LIFE OF THE WILD BIRDS: a New Method of Bird Study and Photography. By FRANCIS H. HERBICK. Illustrated with 150 Photographs from Life. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

ZUNI FOLK-TALES. By FRANK H. CUSHING. Illustrated. 8vo. cloth, 15s. net.

The late well-known ethnologist, Frank Hamilton Cushing, left among his papers the manuscript, together with illustrations, of a work on 'Zuni Folk-Tales,' including more than thirty stories which he had recorded and translated during his long and intimate association with the Zuni tribe in New Mexico.

NAT GOULD'S SPORTING NOVELS

Crown 8vo. boards, designs by John Sturgess, price 2s. each; and in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Among all lovers of sport, the name of NAT GOULD has become a household word. As Sportsman, Journalist, and Globe-trotter, few men have gone through more varied experiences, and still fewer have used their experience to such excellent purpose.

The LEEDS MERCURY says: 'Mr. Nat Gould can write a racing story better, perhaps, than any other living man.'

The SPORTSMAN says: 'He is brilliant in the description of a race.'

The COUNTY GENTLEMAN says: 'His racing tales are always capital reading.'

IMMANUEL KANT: his Life and Doctrine. By

FRIEDRICH PAULSEN, Professor of Philosophy in the University of Berlin. Translated from the revised German Edition by J. E. CREIGHTON and ALBERT LEFEVRE. With Portrait and Facsimile Letter of Kant (1792).

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.—The author's admirable methods of exposition are here applied to a formerly difficult subject with skill and authority. The examination of Kant's doctrine, sympathetic but discriminating, affords an excellent example of Prof. Paulsen's well-known faculty for separating what is temporal from what is permanent and valuable in a system of philosophy. The book possesses several characteristics which make it specially valuable for English readers. In the first place, the author brings together and utilises the more important results of the detailed investigations which have been carried on in Germany in recent years. Secondly, he has not restricted his account to the critical method, but has also treated Kant's philosophy as a whole, and has emphasised the constructive side of his metaphysics. Thus the critical and agnostic elements of Kant's thought are subordinated to a positive and idealistic metaphysics.

THE OPERA: a History of the Development of Opera. With full Descriptions of all Works in the Modern Repertory. By R. A. STREATFIELD. With an Introduction by J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.—This book was published six years ago, and as the first edition of 1,600 copies was rapidly taken up the book has in consequence been out of print for several years past. The constant need, alike to the ordinary reader, the opera-goer, and the student, of a work such as the present—which combines a history of opera with a clear and succinct narration of the stories of operas past and present—provides the reason for the appearance of a new edition. The present edition has been carefully revised and corrected throughout by the author, and additions have also been made.

NEW EDITION, in One Volume, demy 8vo. cloth, gilt top, price 10s. 6d.

THE MEMOIRS OF COUNT GRAMMONT. By

ANTHONY HAMILTON. Edited by Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart. With Portrait of the Author and 11 Etchings by L. BOISSON, after C. DELORT.

DAILY NEWS.—'For spirit, delicacy, and minuteness of detail it would be difficult to overpraise M. Delort's etchings.'

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS AND EDITIONS DE LUXE

VANISHING KENSINGTON.

THE OLD COURT SUBURB

Memorials of Kensington, Regal, Critical, and Anecdotal.

By J. H. LEIGH HUNT.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON.
With 120 Photogravure and other Illustrations by HERBERT RAILTON, EDMUND J. SULLIVAN, and C. A. SHEPPERSON.

Amongst Mr. Railton's drawings are several of Holland House, Gore House, Scarsdale House, and other buildings in Kensington of historical interest. Mr. Sullivan gives 25 Portraits, amongst which are those of Lady Blessington, Count d'Orsay, Fox, Pitt, Addison, Voltaire, &c.

2 vols. large square 8vo. £2. 2s. net.

Also a Large Paper Edition, 2 vols. price of which may be obtained from the Booksellers.

ATHENÆUM.—'To produce a good old book and make it a new one without offence is a great feat, which Messrs. Freemantle & Co. have accomplished in their sumptuous, admirably printed and illustrated edition. . . . Mr. Austin Dobson was the very man to write the graceful introduction and brief notes. . . . Three artists contribute with conspicuous success. Mr. Railton provides the generally delightful studies of buildings. . . . while Mr. E. J. Sullivan and Mr. Claude Shepperson really "embellish" the volumes with their views of old-time dresses and figures. . . . The sketch of Count D'Orsay may be compared with Mr. Tree's impersonation.'

THE TIMES.—'We . . . welcome the artistic two-volumed edition. . . . In spite of the notorious indolence of bricklayers, their work proceeds so fast that it is really necessary for pen and pencil to rescue our old buildings from oblivion. . . . It is one of the merits of this new edition that the reader's craving for drawings . . . is amply satisfied. . . . With these and Mr. Austin Dobson's introduction and notes, the new edition of the book does full justice to its author.'

An Illustrated Prospectus with Extracts from numerous reviews will be forwarded on application.

MOSAICON, or PAPER MOSAIC, and How to Make it. With full Instructions, Diagrams, and Coloured Plates. By W. BEMROSE, F.S.A. Price 1s.

'This is a new art whereby beautiful articles resembling Mosaic may be made from paper of various hues. It is a very simple to learn, and, when once acquired, the worker may soon become an adept at it. The instructions are clear and concise, while the models are quite art treasures in themselves. By means of this new process a y old box—cigar boxes are especially good—can be transformed, with very little expense and trouble, into beautiful and useful ornaments for the toilet table or drawing room. Its properties are very lasting, and, with a little taste, the work can be made to resemble a casket of jewels. We feel sure that when it gets more widely known it will become very popular with ladies who desire to enhance the appearance of their homes with elegant ornaments at a trifling cost.'—SHEFFIELD POST.

MOSAICON MATERIALS. Paper and Cards, Gold and Various Colours. Sixpence per packet, or in boxes at 5s. and 10s. Lists on application.

MR. PHILIP WELLBY'S LIST

LUDUS AMORIS

By BENJAMIN SWIFT. Crown 8vo. 6s.

'Mr. Swift's characters are unusually varied. In addition to those already mentioned are a chimney-sweep and his "lady"; an Irish horse-dealer; a professional pickpocket; a French flower-girl; a hen-pecked rose-grower; and a quaint old country dame. They are all very much alive, and are not more unlike real people than the canons of comedy allow.'—GRAPHIC.

'It has narrative power, ease, grace, style, and, best of all, is interesting. The book will certainly be read, and deserves to be.'—KING.

'We are really interested . . . and await the denouement with some measure of excitement.'—ATHENÆUM.

'Sport, love, and crime are fused by masterly imagination into a fine rough casting. Mr. Swift has done nothing so vital before.'—YORKSHIRE POST.

CAN A WOMAN SELL BOOKS AS WELL AS A MAN?

Can a woman sell books as well as a man? 'That,' according to the Publishers' Weekly, 'depends upon the woman,' and then our American contemporary proceeds to argue that the average woman is not a good seller, 'not because she cannot be, but because she does not try to be.' We have no experience of the American female bookseller, but we certainly are astonished to learn that she is 'dull and exasperating'—that would be the very last thing we should have imagined that brightest of human beings, the American girl, could possibly be.

'Young lady' assistants in our booksellers' shops in this country have a very good reputation; we have almost invariably found them bright, intelligent, quiet, courteous, and often very pretty, so much so that, having gone into a shop at some seaside or other 'Emporium of Literature' to get a postage stamp, we have come out laden with the proprietor of the Emporium's 'Local Guide,' an album of views of the district, and much other miscellaneous general fiction. Burns, had he lived in Scotland of to-day, would certainly have written many a charming verse to 'The Lass that Sold my Poems to Me' at Bonnie Dundee, or Alan Water, or some other of the Messrs. Menzies' railway bookstalls in the north, now presided over by Scotia's fair daughters.

But 'what's up' with our American friend? What can the matter be? Surely the stock of 'Bile Beans' has run out in the States, or he would not write like this:—

'Women do almost all the retail buying, and certainly the sex that buys should make the better seller. The trouble seems to be that most women start in to work not as if they were going into a profession or a trade for life, but as a temporary means of support. For this reason they are uncertain and unstable—their hearts are not in their work, and they and their employers know it. So long as opportunities are not open to women, and they are hired because they are cheap, and so long as the chief end of woman is matrimony, man, not by ability, but through circumstances, will be worth more as a seller in every market.

'Of course, there are notable exceptions in which the able woman proves herself sometimes more than the equal of the able man of the same class; in witness of these exceptions we need only point to the number of women holding responsible positions in bookstores and publishing houses in this country. The reason why these women have succeeded is very likely due to the fact that they have lived up to the axiom that "in business a girl must be a boy;" that is, she must be willing to be judged on her merits, and not expect favours or extraordinary concessions on account of her sex. This she may do without thereby sacrificing any of the natural prerogatives of her sex—in other words, without becoming less womanly.

'Women have been found excellent help in library work, and there is no reason why they should not also become useful assistants in the larger retail bookstores. It certainly is within the range of every woman's capacity to assist in selling books. In fact, it has been found in other fields that women have many advantages over men. According to the latest report of the Commissioner of Labour, they are more easily controlled, more reliable, and neater than men. On the other hand, they are more careless and less interested in their work—two serious drawbacks to booksellers' assistants. However, men have often proven the impossibility of a woman doing things that she has nevertheless serenely accomplished without visible effort, lightly surmounting obstacles that man would laboriously blast his way through, and reaching the desired goal by routes of her own. It is always safe to affix a mental reservation to any assertion as to what a woman can or cannot do.

'The chief difficulty is that women, as a rule, drift into the special work they do; very few choose a line of business for which they have special fitness. Nor can many women learn to take a view of anything outside their own personality. This is why it is so hard to interest most women in the work they have in hand. Yet, as almost every woman is great in emergencies, there is no reason why, in the steady grind of business life, she should be either dull or exasperating. By proper training she might easily become the reverse.'

[It was wise of the editor of the Publishers' Weekly to qualify his remarks by saying that it is 'always safe to affix a mental reservation to any assertion as to what a woman can or cannot do.' We hope he will print what she does in his case—when he recovers.—Ed.]

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The King has graciously accepted the dedication of the Coronation Prayer Book, which is now being prepared at the Oxford University Press. Large type cast from the matrices given to the University by Bishop Fell about the year 1666 has been employed throughout, and appropriate initials and borders have been specially drawn and engraved for exclusive use in this commemoration edition. The Coronation Prayer Book is being printed with rubrics in red on Oxford India paper.

The June number of the Art Journal will be principally devoted to a description of the most remarkable of the royal possessions. Mr. Lionel Cust, M.V.O., his Majesty's Surveyor of Pictures and Works of Art; Mr. R. R. Holmes, M.V.O., the King's Librarian at Windsor; Mr. Guy Francis Laking, M.V.O., the King's Armourer, will contribute articles on the Pictures, Miniatures, Drawings, and Armour in the Royal Palaces. Every care has been taken to insure the inclusion of the most choice examples of the art of all periods in his Majesty's Collection. The number will be an authentic compilation of considerable value. There will be several plate reproductions, one of which will be an original etching by Mr. Axel H. Haig, R.E., showing the interior of Westminster Abbey.

No book of economic and sociological interest in recent years has had anything like the vogue and the immediate influence of Mr. B. S. Rowntree's 'Poverty: a Study of Town Life.' Several local inquiries of the same character as Mr. Rowntree's are now being planned, and in circles devoted to philanthropy and social reform the man who did not know this work would now be regarded as very much 'out of it.' The second edition of the book is now exhausted, and Messrs. Macmillan have a third edition in preparation, a remarkable six months' record for a book of this kind.

Another successful book appealing to the same class of readers is Prince Kropotkin's 'Fields, Factories, and Workshops.' A third large impression of the popular edition has been called for, and will be issued by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein in a few days.

Editions of the Coronation Service as approved by the King in Council for use on June 26 next are in preparation at the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, and will be issued in various sizes as soon as publication is permitted. In addition to the copies intended for popular use, editions for preservation as special mementos will be published. The Service is described as 'The Form and Order of the Service that is to be performed and of the Ceremonies that are to be observed in the Coronation of their Majesties King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster, on Thursday the 26th day of June, 1902.'

Mr. Fisher Unwin is just bringing out a book which has the promising title 'The Epistles of Atkins.' When the South African campaign was new, big with battle, and our soldiers impressionable, they wrote home many letters in which they set out their personal feelings and experiences. The idea of this book is to gather from these rude, direct, authentic letters a reliable picture of just what active service, under modern conditions of warfare, means to the fighting man. It is a study in the psychology of battle, and will be illustrated from actual war sketches. The author is Mr. James Milne, who is known in the London book world as the writer of the literary news which appears twice a week in the Daily Chronicle under the title 'Writers and Readers.'

The Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., has chosen 'Brooks by the Traveller's Way' as the title for his forthcoming volume of week-night addresses, which will be published almost immediately by Mr. H. R. Allenson. There will be twenty-six addresses in the book.

A new volume of the 'Gentleman's Magazine Library' will be published during this month, containing the collections from the Gentleman's Magazine relating to Worcestershire and Yorkshire. This volume will complete the counties of England, and, apart from the volumes on London, will finish the topographical section of the work.

We are glad to see that a second edition has been called for of 'Church Folk Lore: a Record of some Post-Reformation Usages in the English Church now mostly Obsolete,' by the Rev. J. E. Vaux, M.A., F.S.A., published by Messrs. Skeffington & Son. This book is unique. It contains the result of many years' inquiry into old local English Church customs, many of which have never before been described in print. All are curious, and many quaint. Most of these usages have quite died out in practice, and remain only in the memory of old people, who must themselves soon pass away. Hence it was thought to be quite worth while to place them on more or less permanent record.

The title of Marie Corelli's new romance which will be published by Messrs. Methuen in the late summer of this year is 'Temporal Power: a Study in Supremacy.'

The new volume of the 'Nineteenth Century Series,' at present being issued by Messrs. W. & R. Chambers, is entitled 'Progress in South Africa in the Century,' by G. McCall Theall, LL.D., historiographer to the Cape Government, and will be ready immediately. Other volumes that will follow soon are 'Literature of the Century,' by Professor A. B. de Mille; 'Progress of India, Japan, and China,' by the late Sir Richard Temple; 'Continental Rulers in the Century,' by Percy M. Thornton; and 'Progress of Canada in the Century,' by J. C. Hopkins.

The death occurred on Monday morning, at his residence, near Gloucester, of John Bellows, a well-known printer and a member of the Society of Friends. Deceased, whose age was seventy-one, compiled the widely-used French Dictionary, and was an authority on the Roman occupation of England. He was distinguished by his exertions for the relief of the Armenians. He published a pamphlet justifying England's position in South Africa.—Westminster Gazette.

The highest price yet paid for a copy of a modern author's book has just been given, the Athenæum says, by Mr. T. J. Wise. For £600 he has lately acquired the second of the only two known copies of the original edition of Tennyson's 'Lover's Tale'—to the ordinary man an insignificant little volume—with some corrections in the poet's hand. The other copy is in the Rowfant Library.

Messrs. Putnam inform us that 'The Field Book of American Wild Flowers,' by F. S. Mathews, is now ready from the press. It is of pocket size, and yet it contains descriptions of 850 flowers, with drawings of 350, many of these in colour. A short description of the character and habits of each flower is given, together with a concise definition of its colours, and a reference to the insects which assist in its fertilisation.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is about to issue a fine edition on Japan paper of Mr. F. C. C. Gould's 'Froissart's Modern Chronicles.' The edition will be limited to twenty-five copies, each of which will be numbered and signed by the author. The price will be one guinea net.

Exporters should note that, agreeably with the requirements of the Argentine authorities, a declaration in the following terms must now be made upon all bills of lading in support of the information as to the country of origin of the goods, and must be signed by the shippers, viz.: 'I/we hereby declare that the origin of the above-named goods as given is correctly stated.' No bills of lading which do not comply with this regulation can be accepted by the River Plate Steam Lines.

This Spring the fourth of Messrs. Dent's 'County Guides' will appear, and will deal with the Lake counties. It will be remembered that a part of the novel plan on which these little books are constructed is that they are divided into three sections. In this instance the first part, dealing with the story and scenery of the counties, is in the hands of Mr. W. G. Collingwood. Part II. is made up of articles on natural history and sport, contributed by writers who are well known as authorities on the county. The third part is an exhaustive gazetteer. The volume is well supplied with sketches and maps.

As the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy is ever with us, Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., have decided to add Bacon's works to their Thin Paper Series, which already includes Shakespeare in three volumes. Those who are interested in the controversy will now be enabled to pocket the whole of the works under discussion without personal inconvenience, and ponder over cryptograms on their railway journeys. The new Bacon will be complete in one volume at 3s. 6d. net, bound in lamb-skin. The type will be large and clear, and the paper thin but opaque.

The date of publication of 'Philips' A B C Pocket Atlas-Guide to London,' Coronation Year Edition, fixed for May 8, has had to be postponed until the 14th inst. owing to the exceptional demand.

Messrs. Luzac & Co. will publish, in an attractive style, a new edition of 'The Economy of Human Life,' translated from an Indian manuscript written by an ancient Brahmin. This remarkable little book, the manuscript of which was discovered in Llassa, made its first appearance in the year 1751. By the year 1812 it had already reached its fiftieth edition. The new edition has been prepared, with a preface, by Mr. Douglas M. Gane.

Mr. R. Brimley Johnson has in the press two short but striking works from a new pen, a volume of poems of Imperialist flavour and at the same time full of the revolutionary idea, and a philosophical essay entitled 'Interstellar Life or Post-Planetary Life,' which is illustrated in colour.

The University of Dublin, of which Mr. Sheriff Horace B. Marshall is an M.A., proposes to confer on him the honorary degree of LL.D.

A catalogue of over 2,000 engraved portraits for sale can be had of Mr. A. Russell Smith, 24A Great Windmill Street, London, W. It is an interesting list.

A second edition of Mr. Alfred Stead's 'Japan, our New Ally,' will be issued by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin next week.

Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd., are to publish immediately a novel by Mr. C. K. Burrows, the author of 'The Fire of Life' and many other novels. The story is entitled 'Patricia of the Hills,' and takes place chiefly in Southern Ireland, in the troublous times of '85; but while it has in it many scenes of Irish life, the love-story takes the reader to London, whither Patricia had gone to mend the broken fortunes of her family.

There are very many editions of General Wallace's novel 'Ben-Hur' issued, but they are nearly all very cheap ones. For those who require a more elaborate volume, the 'Players' edition which Messrs. Harper are issuing deserves attention. It is fully illustrated by photographs reproduced in tint of the principal scenes and characters in the play.

Mr. Unwin is about to publish a second edition of 'A Girl of the Multitude,' the new story of the French Revolution by the author of 'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.'

'Military Literature' is the title of a sixteen-page catalogue of ancient and modern works on the subject which Mr. Albert Sutton, of 8 Deansgate, Manchester, has for sale.

'Noah was the first man to advertise. He advertised the flood, and kept everlastingly at it until the flood came,' says an American advertiser, Mr. C. H. Coles.

'You frankly confess that your novel failed because of a lack of literary skill?' 'I do,' answered the author. 'The man who wrote the advertisements was no good.'—Ex.

Messrs. Forster, Groom & Co. have brought out 'Army Signalling,' special test cards for beginners, 16 sets, arranged by Lieut. H. R. von D. Hardinge, 4th Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent.

Father Herbert Lucas, S.J., M.A., has had in preparation for some considerable time past a volume to be entitled 'The Westminster Cathedral and the History and Principles of Ecclesiastical Architecture,' of which the publishers will be Messrs. Sands & Co. The work will contain some 200 illustrations.

Mr. E. H. Cooper, author of 'Mr. Blake of Newmarket,' is engaged in writing a new sporting novel, which Mr. John Long will publish next autumn. It is entitled 'George and Son.'

The G. W. Dillingham Company, New York, announce a new novel by Augusta Evans Wilson, 'A Speckled Bird,' the scenes of which take place soon after the Civil War. Its title is taken from the Scripture, 'As a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her.' It is sixteen years since the publication of Mrs. Wilson's last novel. More than a million copies of her works have been sold.

LONDON TOPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY

Mr. Bernard Gomme, the hon. secretary, has sent us a copy of the first 'Annual Record of the London Topographical Society, 1900,' including the reports of the first three annual meetings of the Society, illustrated, edited by T. Fairman Ordish, F.S.A., Chairman of the Executive Committee. The report forms a handsome octavo volume of 124 pp. Among the illustrations there is a very interesting reproduction of 'a picture of the Strand from Exeter Change to the Maypole, in 1713.' The subject is the Royal Procession to St. Paul's on the occasion of the public thanksgiving for the Peace of Utrecht, July 7, 1713.

In addition to this handsome volume, the Society have made a notable addition to the available 'Londina Illustrata' by unearthing and reproducing in facsimile the coloured plan of the highway from Hyde Park Corner to Counter's Bridge (Addison Road), which was prepared with so much elaboration and care by Joseph Salway, the Surveyor to the Kensington Turnpike Trustees, in 1811.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

(Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORD JUSTICE STIRLING; and LORD JUSTICE COZENS-HARDY.)

MOFFATT & PAIGE (LIMITED) v. GEORGE GILL & SONS (LIMITED) AND F. MARSHALL.

This was an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kekewich, reported in the Times of March 14, 1901, and 17 the Times Law Reports, 414. The case was one of some interest to the literary and scholastic world.

The plaintiffs, Messrs. Moffatt & Paige (Limited), and the defendants, Messrs. Gill & Sons (Limited), are publishers in Warwick Lane, and the defendant, the Rev. Francis Marshall, is the author of several books for schools.

In February 1893 the plaintiffs' predecessors published an annotated edition of 'As You Like It,' as one of a series of Shakespeare's plays prepared for schools, and the copyright was registered in their names as proprietors at Stationers' Hall. In 1898 or early in 1899 an annotated first edition of Shakespeare's play of 'As You Like It,' by the Rev. Francis Marshall, was published by the defendants, Messrs. Gill and Sons. On December 22, 1899, the plaintiffs issued a writ against the defendant publishers complaining that Mr. Marshall's book was an infringement by them of the copyright in several works, and among others of the plaintiffs' work on 'As You Like It.' That action was disposed of by a consent order dated January 10, 1900. It appeared from that order that the defendants paid agreed damages and agreed costs, and also bound themselves to destroy all copies in their possession in respect of which the action was brought, the plaintiffs on their parts undertaking not to commence any action against Mr. Marshall in respect of the matters in question in that action. The defendant Marshall, however, was no party to that order. In accordance with that order, all copies of the first edition of Mr. Marshall's book in the possession of the defendant publishers were destroyed. The defendant Marshall then wrote a second edition, which was again published by the defendant publishers.

The plaintiffs complained that the second edition, although it contained alterations, was substantially a copy of the first; and thereupon, on May 9, 1900, they commenced this present action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from the alleged infringement of their copyright. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants' book, the second edition, was a colourable imitation of their book, and an infringement of their copyright—(1) in the general arrangement, (2) in the sketches of character, (3) in the literary notes and glossary, (4) in the quotations from the play illustrating the points and quotations from other authors. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants' book was not the result of independent research, but contained many passages which were merely copies from the plaintiffs' book with but slight alteration; and they claimed damages, an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing the infringement, and an order for delivery up of the copies in the defendants' possession. Mr. Marshall in his defence denied that his book was a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' book, or an infringement of their copyright. He admitted having read the plaintiffs' book, but stated that he had compiled his book after independent research and after consulting not only the plaintiffs' book, but various other commentators. He had simply made a legitimate use of all the books bearing on the subject. Mr. Justice Kekewich, in delivering a considered judgment on the trial of the action, said he felt himself compelled by the pleadings to restrict his decision to the second edition, and that, however much he might be disposed to condemn the first, or to hold that in the preparation of the second the defendant Marshall had been largely influenced by the contents of the first and his recollection of them, his Lordship did not deem himself at liberty to allow that to enter into the consideration of the issue raised in the present action. Then, after considering the evidence, his Lordship came to the conclusion that there had been no animus furandi on the part of the defendant Marshall, and, therefore, that no injunction or relief by way of damages should be granted against him; but, having regard to his want of candour in not acknowledging, in the second edition of his book, the sources of his information, the learned Judge refused to give him any costs, though he ordered the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the defendant publishers. From that decision the plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Warrington, K.C., Mr. Scrutton, K.C., Mr. Henry Lynn, and Mr. R. J. R. Goffin, for the plaintiffs, contended that the learned Judge, in arriving at his decision, ought not to have disregarded the first edition of Marshall's book, but should have regarded the second edition as springing from the first, it being substantially a copy of the first, the only difference being in some re-arrangement of the contents and in some alterations of language.

Mr. P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Mr. Percy Wheeler were for the defendant Marshall; and Mr. J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Mr. Lincoln Reed for the defendants George Gill & Sons, Ltd.

The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment yesterday, said the plaintiffs' book was one of a class of books designed to meet a modern want—namely, to enable young persons to pass a certain class of examinations which were common throughout the country, and they represented the last device of teachers for meeting the demands of examiners. The object of such books was to substitute the mental effort of the teacher for that of the person taught, and to meet the examiners on their own ground. The class of book produced to meet the exigency was not so much a literary work as a work well designed for stimulating the faculties and to meet the particular purpose—namely, the passing of an examination. That required a good memory on the part of the pupil, which was much more likely than any effort of analysis to enable him to pass an examination. The author of the work published by the plaintiffs seemed to have been the first person to conceive the idea of indoctrinating the minds of pupils with subject-matter for examinations by books of this class. The salient part of his present work was the character sketches. The plaintiffs published it in 1893, and curiously enough the defendant Marshall, who was a rival competitor of the author in preparing pupils for examination, did not bring out his book until about 1899. It was a curious fact that there was a very marked resemblance between the work brought out by the defendant Marshall and the work of the plaintiffs, so much so that in an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants the publishers of Marshall's work, those defendants submitted, before trial, to an order to make a money payment, and also undertook to destroy all copies of the incriminated edition of the work in their possession. Marshall, however, was not a party to those proceedings. The moment the obnoxious documents were destroyed the defendant publishers put it into the hands of Marshall to write a new edition, which would not be an infringement of the plaintiffs' work. This he did; but when the plaintiffs came to examine it they considered it an infringement. The consequence was that they brought the present action, not only against the publishers of the infringing work, but also against Marshall, the author. At the trial of this action there was an elaborate examination of these works, and Mr. Justice Kekewich came to the conclusion that he could not interfere to restrain the defendants from publishing the incriminated work. With that conclusion he (the Master of the Rolls) could not agree, though in all other respects he had the authority of the learned Judge for the opinion he now formed, for the learned Judge was of opinion that the present edition of the defendants' work was just as much an infringement of the plaintiffs' work as the first edition was. It was clear from the evidence that in preparing the second edition Marshall carefully read the proofs of the first, marking for the printer the passages that could not stand, and were therefore not to appear in the second. But he followed the first in arrangement and in other respects. Mr. Justice Kekewich took the view that the second edition was substantially the same as the first, but he did not give effect to that view, considering that he was at liberty to look at the second edition only and disregard the first, since that edition was not the subject-matter of the action. With the greatest respect he must differ from the learned Judge. The court was at liberty to look at all the circumstances, and to see how the second edition had been evolved from the first. It was clear that this edition was a copy by Marshall of the first, and not a mere reflex of his memory, and his Lordship was quite content to take Mr. Justice Kekewich's own view that the only reason why he felt himself fettered from giving full effect to it was that for the purposes of deciding the question in this action he must regard the second edition only, and not the first. That only obstacle he (the Master of the Rolls) now removed, and the plaintiffs were entitled to have their work protected. Though it was not in the highest sphere of literary work, it showed a large amount of ingenuity, and was well adapted to its purpose; it had, moreover, received the highest compliment, that of imitation. It showed much skill and industry, and, of its kind, very scholarly work, which the defendant Marshall had not quite succeeded in achieving himself. After citing several authorities establishing the plaintiffs' right to relief, his Lordship said it was clear that Marshall had copied absolutely and wholesale from the work of another without going through the process of himself consulting the sources from which the plaintiffs had taken their quotations. It was not a case of occasional or casual imitation only—that is, an imitation which did not infringe copyright. The plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, and the appeal must be allowed, with costs.

Lord Justice Sterling was of the same opinion. The question arising in this case was one of fact—whether the defendant Marshall had made an improper use of the plaintiffs' work. Upon the facts his Lordship was of opinion that the defendant had made an illegitimate use of the work, and therefore the appeal must be allowed.

Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy concurred.

UNDERSTAMPING CORRESPONDENCE.

A correspondent of the London PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR complains of the carelessness of his 'cousins in the States' in 'persistently understamping their correspondence' to England, and the editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, who 'from a long experience can confirm what [its] correspondent says,' hopes that the Publishers' Weekly will air this grievance for its English confrères. We hasten to realise the hopes of our esteemed contemporary, and trust that the trade will take notice and exercise more care in the future, so that our friends may be spared annoyance and expense, which latter, by the way, should properly be borne by the offender. Having pointed out the 'beam' in our own eyes, we might now also be permitted to call attention to the 'mote' in the eyes of our kin across the sea, for the offence complained of in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is not a one-sided one, the receipt of underpaid letters from England being by no means infrequent.—New York Publishers' Weekly.

WESTMINSTER, by Reginald Airy, B.A., with fifty-one illustrations. London: Messrs. George Bell & Sons.

Mr. Airy opens this volume of the series, 'Handbooks to the Great Public Schools,' with a record of the founding and early history of St. Peter's College, Westminster, continuing the chronicle until the time when the headmaster was Lambert Osbaldeston, who improved the teaching of Greek and introduced English composition into the school curriculum with such good effect that young Abraham Cowley wrote his 'Pyramus and Thisbe' while still at school. In his second chapter he tells the story of the long régime of Dr. Richard Busby from 1638 to 1695 during the troublous times of the great Civil War, the Commonwealth, and the Revolution of 1688. Busby's hobby, we are told, was grammar, and he compiled a Greek Grammar which went through many editions; and Francis Lynn records in his diary that he paid four shillings for a copy. Sir Richard Steele, or rather Mr. Joseph Addison's creation, good old Sir Roger de Coverley, said of the doctor, 'A great man, Dr. Busby, he whipped my grandfather, a very great man. I should have been under him if I had not been a blockhead.' Mr. Airy says, however, that 'Busby's severity has been considerably exaggerated.' The third chapter brings the history of the school down to the resignation of the late excellent headmaster, Dr. Rutherford, at the beginning of this year, and the appointment of Dr. Gow. Other three chapters deal with Westminster at the Present Day; School Work; and Games and Athletics. The Latin Play, Lists of Deans and of Head-masters, Numbers of the School at different periods, and present House Masters fill five Appendices. The illustrations are admirable.

SOME NOTES ON BOOKS AND PRINTING: a Guide for Authors, Publishers, and others.

By Charles T. Jacobi, Managing Partner of the Chiswick Press. London: Charles Whittingham & Co., Took's Court, Chancery Lane. Demy 8vo., pp. x and 158. New and enlarged edition.

This may reasonably be called the 'Book of Books,' seeing that without the knowledge which it comprehends no book could be properly produced. When an author has written his work he has only reached the threshold of authorship, for to what use can he put his manuscript unless he multiplies it indefinitely? His next stage is to print it, and here it is that Mr. Jacobi's book steps in and puts him on the right track. Within the compass of a small space it is impossible to tell what information he will find within its covers. It teaches him how to estimate the number of printed pages his manuscript will make; he can choose from an admirable assortment of specimens the type he likes best; he will find useful hints about copyright, about binding, and about publishing; he will find samples of paper on which to print it; he will find the fullest directions for reading, marking, and correcting proof sheets; and not only authors, but publishers and even printers themselves may find much knowledge that would be of use to them; but above all the book should be a manual for all young men aspiring to become printers of taste; assistants in booksellers' and stationers' shops will find invaluable knowledge on inquiring within it. Some evidence of the value of the book is that this is a second edition, and that it contains at least one third more matter than the first edition. It is beautifully printed—indeed, it may be called a very fine example of typography from the Chiswick Press, and respecting that press it may be said that the finest examples of printing produced elsewhere have been largely due to the teaching of the Chiswick Press, which certainly for fine taste and workmanship is unsurpassed.

Trade paper advertising has become an essential of any business. And those who are liberal in their expenditures will do most.

DEATH OF BRET HARTE.

CAREER OF THE GREAT AMERICAN HUMORIST.

We deeply regret to announce the death—which took place on Monday afternoon—of Mr. Bret Harte, the famous American humorist.

Mr. Bret Harte had resided at the Red House, Camberley, Surrey, for about three years. The house stands in beautiful grounds on a typical Surrey hill. For some months past he had suffered from a malignant affection of the throat, and for the treatment of this occasionally visited London physicians.

Although he had not taken to his bed, it was anticipated by his medical advisers that when hemorrhage set in it would cause death. Such was the case. Mr. Bret Harte was about the house as usual on Monday, and at three o'clock hemorrhage commenced. Everything possible was done, but the end came peacefully about six in the evening, being actually due to heart failure through exhaustion. Mr. Harte died surrounded by the members of his family.

The literary activity of the novelist was maintained practically to the end. As recently as Wednesday last a review of a new volume of his stories, 'On the Old Trail,' appeared in the Daily Chronicle.

Bret Harte dwelt so long among us that we had come almost to regard him as one of ourselves. He came to London first at the close of the seventies, with a name which had preceded him by ten years. He lectured on the Argonauts of 1849—those hardy, adventurous pioneers of the Pacific Slope, who figured so much in his writings. From that time Bret Harte was both a personality and a name to English people. The personal acquaintanceship ripened while he was American Consul in Glasgow. Eventually he made London and England his home, only his pen always turned fondly and surely to the West, to the land of the Argonauts, to California which had inspired it. As he wrote of pioneers, so he himself was a pioneer in literature—he was more to it than a 'spray of Western Pine.' He was a pioneer—perhaps the pioneer—of what we know as Western literature. He was a pioneer of what is known to modern literature as the short story. Bret Harte was a poet, a novelist, and instinctively a dramatist, but his short stories will be the crown of his fame.

How did he come to write them? How came he by those experiences which made his genius flame forth in the colours of the West?

For be it remembered that Francis Bret Harte, to give him the full name, was not a native of the Pacific Slope. He was born at Albany, the legislative capital of New York State, on the 25th of August, in the year 1839. His father was a professor in Albany College, and so, from his cradle, he walked in the ways of literature and culture. While still little more than a lad he was left fatherless, with his own way to carve in the world. Like so many other young Americans, he turned his eyes to California—'To the West, to the West'—and set out to follow in the steps of the Argonauts. He dug with pick and shovel, but the toil did not bring him any golden fortune. Next he was in the employ of the great express company which carried the gold-dust from the Californian diggings to the banks in the nearest towns. This company was the link between the miners and the outer world, and those who maintained that link were wont to have adventurous days and nights. In those gold-mining days life in California was wild and picturesque—the day's work was a romance. Mining camps, stage coaches, the rude miners themselves—they stirred the soul of Bret Harte. The whole picture was writing itself into his mind, and by-and-by he was to draw upon his inexhaustible stores. He tried schoolmastering and did not find it greatly to his taste. He soldiered in two campaigns against the Indians and rose to be a staff officer. The bugle call of the Civil War found him answer in patriotic verse, and in membership of the Volunteer City Guard of San Francisco. Again he was setting type, learning in a very practical way to be a journalist, and finally he found himself installed an official in the Government Mint at San Francisco. His work as an author may be dated from 1864–1865, though, indeed, he had written not a little already.—From Daily Chronicle.

SALE JOTTINGS.

Some remarkable prices were realised at Messrs. Hodgson's rooms last week for the books and leaflets issued at the Strawberry Hill Press, the total for the ninety-six lots being no less than £700. The most important items were Gray's 'Odes,' Walpole's own copy with notes in his handwriting, £171 (Sabin); Walpole's 'Catalogue of Pictures in the Holbein Chamber at Strawberry Hill,' 8 pp., £28. 10s. (Sotheran); 'Fugitive Pieces in Verse and Prose,' £10. 5s. (Denham); 'Anecdotes of Painting and Catalogue of Engravers,' with additions and corrections in the author's autograph, 5 vols., £32 (Denham); 'A Reply to the Observations of Dr. Milles,' with note in the author's autograph, £45 (Sotheran); 'Life of Lord Herbert of Cherb-urg,' £10. 10s. (Dobell); 'Description of Strawberry Hill, 1784,' £11. 5s.; Lady Craven's 'The Sleep Walker,' £19. 5s. (Denham); Harding's 'Series of Portraits to illustrate the Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors,' in the original numbers, £45. 10s. (Sabin); 'Portraits of Horace Walpole and Thomas Kirgate' (Printer at Strawberry Hill), £10 (Sotheran); 'Reminiscences of Miss Mary and Miss Agnes Berry,' £10. 17s. 6d. (Denham). The 'Leaflets' and 'Detached Pieces' realised even more in proportion than the books, the prices ranging from about £2 to £9. Among the other items included in the same sale were: Jesse's 'London,' extra illustrated and extended to 6 vols., tree calf, £27. 10s. (Fagg); Pardoe's 'Louis XIV.,' extra illustrated, in 6 vols., morocco, £40 (Dobell); Ackermann's 'Microcosm of London,' 3 vols., £23. 10s. (Edwards); Pyne's 'Royal Residences,' 3 vols., £14. 15s. (Rimell); Dresser's 'Birds of Europe,' 8 vols., £35. (Quaritch); 'The Tudor Translations,' 30 vols., £37 (Bain); Boccaccio's 'Il Decamerone,' 5 vols., 1757, £21. 10s. (Quaritch); Tennyson's Poems, by 'Two Brothers,' original wrapper, 1827, £36 (Robson); and Poems chiefly hybrid, original boards, 1830, £20. 10s. (Pearson). The copy of Charles Tennyson's 'Sonnets,' with Thackeray's pen-and-ink sketches, realised the extraordinary price of £300 (Robson).

PAPER UNDERCLOTHING v. THE WASHERWOMAN.

VARIOUS USES OF PAPER.

Chemistry has been labouring in the paper field for two decades, and from the laboratory have come discoveries that have made possible the enormous side products of the paper trade that are now manufactured on a large scale.

One of the things in the paper industry that seemed almost incredible a number of years ago was the manufacture of car wheels. It seemed incomprehensible to the lay mind that wheels made of compressed paper would stand the strain better than wheels made of steel. But the manufacture of paper wheels is no longer a novelty, and they are made in a great variety of sizes and shapes for use on roller skates up to heavy car wheels. After the car wheels made of paper were announced somebody applied paper to the construction of hollow telegraph poles, which were designed to take the place of those which had heretofore disgraced our streets and highways. But paper telegraph poles have never proved of very great value except to illustrate to the sceptical what can be done with paper. There have in recent years been made of paper water and sewer mains which promise to be of value. These are hardened and treated chemically so that they are more impervious to water than some of the iron and earthenware mains. It remains to be proved by actual test whether they can outlast some of the latter. The announcement was made a few years ago that paper window panes had actually been made and used, but these were much like the oyster-shell window panes of the Filipino huts. They may admit a certain amount of light to brighten up the interior, but they could never be looked through with any degree of satisfaction. Still, a semi-opaque glass is often needed for the ceilings of public buildings, where the light admitted must be dimmed and diffused in passing through the substance. Paper window panes have been used in this way with more or less success.

We Americans are not only the greatest producers of paper in the world, but we have adapted it to more practical uses than any other nation. Our machinery for making paper and for converting it into useful articles of commerce surpasses that of any two European nations, and even in France and Germany, where the refinement of paper finishing has for years reached the high-water mark, our machinery is largely used. In fact, it might be said with considerable truth that our paper machinery has outstripped our paper production, and great as the latter is, the former eclipses it in extent and variety.

By means of improved machinery and new chemical processes wood pulp can be drawn out into the thinnest imaginable sheets. In this squeezing the paper does not lose its toughness. Thus thin paper napkins and tablecloths are produced and printed with fancy borders and patterns. Some of these articles are almost as tough as linen in resisting the attempt to tear them. Of course, they will not stand wetting, and soon lose their toughness when moistened. But otherwise they make serviceable substitution for table linen. Likewise the paper vests and paper underclothing and lining of winter suits are prepared for practical use, and they accomplish nearly all that is claimed for them. The paper vests and lining are made so thin that their weight is practically nothing, and yet they keep out the wind and cold. They are chemically treated so that they will last a long time. They are also manufactured so that they do not make the rustling sound usually characteristic of paper.—Geyer's Stationer.

TOLSTOY'S 'RESURRECTION.'

What will no doubt be regarded as the standard and definitive English version of Tolstoy's great novel 'Resurrection' will be published this week by Mr. Grant Richards in his revised edition of Tolstoy's works, of which Mr. Aylmer Maude is general editor. The famous Russian writer has made extensive alterations in the book, and Mrs. Louise Maude, whose earlier rendering is the best at present in circulation, has had to make practically a new version. An appendix will contain a note of the more significant changes in the text. There will also be an appendix on the pronunciation of Russian names, an index to Russian words and customs, &c., explained in footnotes, and an index to social questions referred to in the course of the narrative. The splendid pictures of Pasternak illustrating the story are being specially reproduced, and will constitute a miniature picture gallery of Russian life. There will also be a cheap unillustrated edition. Mr. Aylmer Maude's lengthy preface is also of high value not only for the points of positive information it contains, such as the instances of the vagaries of translators and publishers, as extravagant, in their way, as those of the Russian censor, but particularly for its careful discussion of the sex problem as it is raised in this novel by Tolstoy. It will be remembered that the Doukhobor Committee of the Society of Friends recently refused to accept money from the sale of the book because they regarded it as a harmful work. This is the challenge which Mr. Maude has taken up on behalf of the writer whom he regards as at once the first moralist and the first literary artist of our day.

Letters to the Editor

THE PROPOSED PROVIDENT SCHEME FOR BOOKSELLERS' ASSISTANTS.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the letters which have recently appeared in your valuable journal on the subject of a provident scheme for booksellers' assistants, the more so as lately one or two very sad cases in our trade have come under my notice.

Surely, though, whatever may be the needs of the country trade, London does not require another society for the relief of those who have fallen on bad times, when we consider the excellent work the Booksellers' Provident Institution has done and is prepared to do for those who join its ranks.

One of the cases which I have referred to above was that of a young married assistant in the 'Row' who died after three days' illness, leaving a wife and two children (one aged two years and the other two weeks) totally unprovided for.

It is doubly sad when one thinks that had this man joined the Institution at, say, 18, for the small sum of rather over 1s. per month (13s. 11d. per annum) he could have guaranteed to his wife a certain sum as long as she needed it, and also something for each child until it reached the age of 15 years.

I am well aware of the stock arguments against the Booksellers' Provident Institution, but whenever I have been able to corner a man and thrash the subject out with him, the only tenable argument he can bring against it is that he may pay his subscription and never receive any benefit therefrom should he not require it. I have often been told, too, that should one require assistance he has to come cap in hand to the directors and beg for it.

That this is an absolute falsity I can aver from my seven or eight years' experience on the Board of the Institution. I cannot remember a single instance where relief has been refused, and each case is most carefully gone into by the Relief Committee and also at the monthly meeting of the directors.

It makes no difference whether the applicant is well known or not in the trade; his case is considered on its own merits, and I have often thought if some of those to whom I have spoken could attend the meetings of the Board all their criticism would be effectually silenced.

Unfortunately, however, this remedy is impossible, as all communications with the Board are obviously confidential.

No, sir; however much a Provident Institution may be wanted for the provinces, and doubtless one is wanted, London is well supplied. I have ventured to trespass to such an extent on your space in order that I may with your permission draw the attention of the younger members of our trade to the fact that a committee has been formed with the object of getting in touch with the juniors in the various wholesale and retail houses in London, in order that they may know what are the advantages to be gained by joining the Institution.

Of this committee I have the honour to be a member, and I shall be only too glad to give every information to anyone who requires it. I believe certain districts will be allotted to each member of the committee, and I shall make it my business to call on such houses as I conveniently can, so that, if it is possible, the number of those who have 'never heard of the Institution' shall be considerably lessened.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN W. HARDEN.

THE APPLIED ART SECTION OF THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

THE PRINTING OF MODERN ILLUSTRATED OR DECORATED BOOKS.

BY CHARLES T. JACOBI.

Mr. Jacobi read a paper on May 6 before 'The Applied Art Section of the Society of Arts' on the above subject. Without criticising his paper we quote a few passages here and there which may interest our readers. Mr. Jacobi is of course well known as the managing partner of the Chiswick Press, founded by the Whittinghams at the end of the eighteenth century.

In the first place we ought to consider what constitutes the artistic properties of a printed book. The three factors are type, paper, and ink, and in the selection of these materials some judgment is required, not only as to their quality, but that the combination, especially of type and paper, shall be in accord. The next step is to secure a proper format for the work, and in this shaping of the volume very much depends on the exact proportion of the type area to that of paper. The question of margin is a most important matter, and later on I shall return to that subject. It is this which imparts dignity to a book. The precise proportion of surrounding margin is regulated largely by the size of the book and that of the type employed, although the exact relation of the margins on the four sides of the page should still preserve the same proportion to each other, however the total area may vary. No definite rules can be laid down to govern these details, and that is where the difficulty lies. It is simply a matter of taste or artistic appreciation on the part of the printer or the person responsible for the design of the page.

These essentials to a good book being granted, the next important thing is the proper application by the workman of the material elements. We hear it said on all sides that the subdivision of labour in any art or craft serves to lower the individual workman's interest in his work, and possibly this is so. Modern requirements through competition and other causes have necessitated or rather dictated this, and the only remedy I can suggest, if this division of labour must still exist, is proper supervision—firstly by the principal, and in turn this must be well seconded by the heads of the different departments. Of course, in making these suggestions I have in mind that commercial considerations of the present time have necessitated very large printing houses which have to cater for the general public on utilitarian lines. The smaller presses, private or otherwise, have their own methods, and do not compete with the average printer. Very much work done in a general printing office is of the passing moment, but there is no reason why even that class of work should not be done decently and well. After all it costs no more to do this, because it is purely a matter of style, and if the materials employed are poor, by reason of some limitation of price, much may be done in the actual shaping and printing of the book.

One may fairly attribute the modern renaissance of printing in the middle of the 19th century to the revival of the Caslon type, and the subsequent adoption generally of the modernised form of old-faced fonts. This renaissance has been considerably emphasised by the influence of the Kelmscott Press in the nineties.

The productions of most of the private printing presses of the present time must, on the whole, be commended, for the books issued therefrom have created a demand for better things, and, through that, given a stimulus to the ordinary printers. This has been the means of considerably improving the average class of book printing; but, at the same time, it must be confessed that it has had the usual effect of producing some examples that are hopelessly bad, and exaggerated in form and in execution too. Sometimes the spirit was caught, but the conception fell short in its execution. Unfortunately there are many travesties of Morris's style. His type was appropriated with varying success, but most of the attempts to imitate his ornament or decoration were dismal failures, unless they happened to be a direct piracy of any particular piece or set, and they too often were badly reproduced.

This theory of legibility I would also like to see applied generally, for not only does the absence of it affect the ordinary reader, but it very seriously handicaps the rising generation while undergoing the necessary educational course. If scholastic books could be printed in larger type there would be no necessity for the London School Board to appoint oculists to examine the eyes of the scholars.

One instance I call to mind on the subject of the decline in legibility of type is that of the three-volume novel. That particular form of literature was in some respects an advantage. In order to spin the work out to its orthodox length a large type had to be employed, and if it was not always handsome, it had at least the merit of being readable from the fact that it was fairly large and comfortably leaded. I think we all appreciate such printing when we sit down to read a book. The 6s. novel of the present day is issued in one volume only, and the size of its type has often to be cramped to keep it within that limit.

The use of small type, except for certain and special purposes, should be made penal.

The subject of newspaper printing is one that might also be well considered by the Society of Arts. It has instituted committees, and issued reports on the present-day paper used, and also on the leather used for binding purposes. Why not one on type? It would surely be the means of doing some good for the general community.

What is more trying than to attempt the reading of our daily paper as we come to town? Sooner or later this does have a detrimental effect on the eyesight, and if we can obviate the use of artificial aids, or at any rate postpone it for a time, it would be for the general good.

The existing craze for advertising has undoubtedly pandered to the very vulgar taste often displayed in typographic matters. The grossest absurdities in the way of bad lettering are put to this purpose, and to come across a well-displayed advertisement in simple and consistent characters of type is the exception rather than the rule.

The effect of margin is just now being admirably demonstrated to the 'man in the street' on the London County Council hoardings in the Strand hard by the new streets now being formed. The innovation is certainly a good one, and should be an object-lesson, for it shows that a surrounding margin will improve even a huge broadside.

It is worth while to remark at this point that the printing of posters has improved in a general way during the last few years, and some really good broadsides are occasionally to be seen—one of a decorative character was that of the London School Board during the past two sessions announcing the continuation schools. Possibly the fashion for the collection of such things gave an impetus to broadside printing, just as it did for bookplates when that cult came into vogue.

The best half-tone process blocks from a pictorial point are those produced by the use of the finest possible screen. This screen, or almost imperceptible network, is employed in photographing to break up the surface, as it were, in order to impart the necessary medium for varying tones or shades of the picture. To obtain the best results in printing from these blocks it is necessary to print on an absolutely smooth paper, in fact the higher the surface the better the printing is brought out.

All good work was done by hand at one period, for the reason there was no alternative; but there is no need for the general printing office to cling to old methods, for printing machinery has so vastly improved nowadays that equal results can be obtained, provided the workman is intelligent. In fact, it is possible to do all that modern conditions require on a power machine, and on the other hand it would not be possible to obtain everything from the hand-press, even if the men could be found to undertake it. This applies particularly to the printing of books illustrated with half-tone blocks. For small offices or private presses the hand-press serves admirably, and will do all that is required.

I well recollect the late Gleeson White in a paper which he read on 'Drawing for Process Reproduction' before this Society some few years ago, remarking that modern printing had come to stay, and that its conditions forbade a return to the more archaic methods. This I cordially endorse, but what I consider is necessary is for us to adhere to some of those principles which our predecessors laid down, and to avail ourselves of modern methods in their applications. The conditions of our time demand this, and what we have to do is to create fresh standards without being slavishly influenced by any definite or dogmatic canons. A reference, however, to the old masters of printing will certainly help us to formulate and set up new ideals. But to do this it is imperative that the co-operation of author, publisher, printer, and bookbinder be obtained. This was insisted on by Henry Stevens in his little pamphlet, 'Who Spoils our New English Books.'

The making of books of various odd sizes is not a commendable practice, for it savours of eccentricity, and it complicates the classification or description of the books. There are certain standard sizes of books, and unless there is any definite reason for it, I think those standard sizes are sufficient. The inclusion of odd sizes is a great trouble to bibliographers, apart from the question of shelf room. Certain rules are current for the identification of 4tos. from 8vos., and 8vos. from 16mos., but I think the present-day variety would puzzle the most clever librarian when he comes to catalogue his treasures.

The modern printer has much in his favour, and should be able to produce really good work—given the time in which to do it. The selection of book printing founts is now greater than ever. Printing machinery too has very greatly improved during the closing years of the last century, so that the opportunity of doing good work is almost unlimited, providing the printer has the necessary taste and experience, and is not hampered with conditions. That these essentials are necessary I think you will agree.

GROCERY AND GOOD BINDINGS.

Mr. Cobden Sanderson, the English bookbinder, tells of a client that he has in the mountains of North Carolina for whom he has done the choicest work ever turned out from his bindery. A dozen years or more ago he received a letter from this man, enclosing a certain sum of money, with a copy of a valuable first edition of a choice book, asking him to put on it the best binding he could for the money. The commission was executed, and next year came another letter, with about the same sum of money and another book. The same thing occurred year after year, till Mr. Sanderson's curiosity was aroused to such a pitch that he wrote to his client to find out something about him. It turned out that he is the keeper of a little grocery store in the wilds of Carolina. Having nobody dependent upon him, he makes up his accounts at the end of each year, reserves the small sum necessary to keep him for the coming year, and with the surplus buys a book and sends it to the famous London binder. Ever since he learned this, Mr. Cobden Sanderson has put his best thought and his best work on the books of the North Carolina groceryman, and has sent him bindings of the sort that he would make for the finest collections and museums—of a value, in fact, many times the amount of the modest profits of a year's store-keeping that are sent him; and Mr. Cobden Sanderson says that if he ever goes to America one of the first things he will do will be to make a visit to his unknown friend in the

(Copy of Correspondence.)

STATIONERS' HALL, LONDON,
May 5, 1902.

DEAR SIR,—I enclose herewith a copy of correspondence which has passed between the President and the Secretaries to the Commissioners of National Education in Dublin, with reference to the supply of books to the Irish National Schools.

The Council believe that the most satisfactory plan for transacting the business (the Commissioners having given up their book store) would have been the plan suggested in the President's letter of April 17. As, however, the Commissioners have declined to accede to this suggestion, it will be necessary for each publisher to make his own arrangement.

I am, yours faithfully,
WILLIAM POULTEN, Secretary.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION,
STATIONERS' HALL, LONDON,
April 17, 1902.

GENTLEMEN,—Your Circular of April 12 came before the Council of the above Association at their meeting to-day and received their best consideration. A very strong desire was expressed that the Commissioners might see their way to appointing their own agent from among the various capable firms in Dublin. It was felt that this would be in every way more satisfactory than the alternatives of publishers either supplying the various schools direct, or appointing their agents.

If the latter course were adopted, no doubt a variety of agents would be appointed, and the business would be less well conducted than if it were in the hands of one firm.

If the Commissioners see their way to appoint an agent, the Council of the Publishers' Association will do anything in their power to facilitate the arrangement.

I am, Gentlemen, yours faithfully,
C. J. LONGMAN,
President, Publishers' Association.
The Secretaries to
The Commissioners of Education,

OFFICE OF NATIONAL EDUCATION,
DUBLIN, April 29, 1902.

SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 17th inst., I am to point out that the sanction given by the Commissioners of National Education for the use of certain books in the Irish National Schools has always been at the solicitation of publishers or others interested in the works.

As a consequence the regulations, advised in the circular letter of the 12th inst., leave it to each publisher, &c., to make such arrangements as he may consider most advantageous to execute any orders that may be received for such books; but the appointment or nomination by this Department of an agent to act on behalf of the publishers cannot be undertaken.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A. R. HAMILTON, Secretary.

missioners of National Education do not see their way to accept the suggestion that they should appoint an agent in Dublin, responsible to themselves, through whom books published in England should be supplied to the schools controlled by the Commissioners.

DEATH OF WILLIAM TINSLEY.

By the death of Mr. William Tinsley, at his residence in Wood Green, in his seventy-second year, the last member of a once famous publishing house during a large part of the Victorian era disappears, and Tinsley Brothers, as a firm and as individuals, like several of the authors whose reputations they assisted to make, now belong merely to history. The founder of the business was Edward Tinsley, who came to London from Hertfordshire with the usual half-crown and plenty of ambition, and opened a small bookseller's shop in Holywell Street (it, also, is now a thing of the past), where he was joined by his brother William. Subsequently they migrated to Catherine Street. They dealt exclusively with the lighter class of literature, and had their greatest stroke of luck in securing for a modest sum 'Lady Audley's Secret' from Miss Braddon. After that their success was rapid, and a magazine which they founded had for some years a great vogue. About the middle of the sixties Edward died, and the proof that he had been the inspiring genius of the firm was seen in the fact that shortly afterwards decadence set in, and gradually became accentuated, until, long before the century finished, the house of Tinsley disappeared from the publishing world altogether. Not long ago the gentleman who has now expired wrote his 'Memoirs,' which contained many curious stories of literature and littérateurs.—Daily Telegraph, May 3, 1902.

THE 'UNIT LIBRARY'

has attracted considerable attention. The success of this series is no doubt accounted for, to some extent, by the admirable get-up of the books. But the special feature of the Library—the novel method by which the selling price of each volume depends on the number of pages it contains—has certainly been welcomed by the reading public.

Two fresh volumes have just been added to the series. The first of these (No. 5, Hamilton's 'Memoirs of the Count de Grammont,' 7*d.* in paper, 11*d.* in cloth, 1*s.* 8*d.* in leather) has hitherto been unobtainable in an inexpensive form. Occasionally a copy of Sir Walter Scott's edition can be picked up for about as many shillings as there are pence in the price of the more expensive copies now issued. Yet in its way the book is unrivalled. To every student of the times of the English Restoration, Hamilton's lively work is of real importance, while his vivid picture of the court of Charles II. is of the greatest interest to those who read for amusement alone.

The second of these additions to the Library is Anster's verse translation of Goethe's 'Faust.' (No. 6, 6½*d.* in paper, 10½*d.* in cloth, 1*s.* 7½*d.* in leather.) Anster's translation, unlike Wills' acting version, is a faithful rendering of the original poem, without sacrifice to the conventions of the theatre.

W. Barlow, Sir Thomas Munro, Elphinstone, and others, dated 1811, 1825, 1826, 1837; (c) Letter to Sir John Malcolm on the native army, 4to., 22 pp., 1818; (d) Desultory notes on Panchayut, folio, 68 pp.; (e) A long letter addressed to William Erskine relating to the administration of justice in India, folio, 68 pp.; (f) MS. relating to the defending the ranges of hills from the Aumba Ghaut to Luckenwarrie and suggestions for that line continued, &c., by Lieut. Davies, 20 pp. folio, neatly written, 1817; (h) MS. relating to the public expenditure in India, 29 pp. folio; (i) A true statement of the seizure of the Mussuch jewels, by Major-General Andrew MacDowell, C.B., with parallel account by Lieut.-Col. John Briggs, 75 pp. folio, 1831 (this expedition took place in 1818); (j) Minute on the state of the Bombay Army, dated March 25, 1828, by Major-General Sir John Malcolm, folio, 41 pp.; (k) Extract from Sir J. Malcolm's minute dated September 4, 1829, folio, 40 pp.; (l) Letter relating to the distribution of the Army in India, by Sir J. Malcolm, folio, 51 pp. The whole collection dating about 1800 to 183—. Price £15.

Spencer, W. T., New Oxford Street.—No. 109, a 64-page Catalogue of 'A Great Variety of Books,' including works on Africa, America, Australasia, books on Angling, Architecture, books with Coloured Plates, books with Choice Bindings, Cruikshank books, many editions of Dickens, books on Sports and Recreations, Naval and Military books, Ruskin's Works, Rolandson's Plates, Scott's Works (including a first edition of 'Harold the Dauntless,' 35*s.*), Thackeray's Works, &c.

Sutton, A., Manchester.—No. 102, Catalogue of Ancient and Modern Books from the libraries of the late Hugh Mason, Esq., M.P. for Ashton-under-Lyne, and the late William Horsfall, Esq., of Cheetham Hill, including Biography, History, Voyages and Travels, Geology, Natural History, Sport, Topography, Genealogy, Political Economy, Illustrated Books, and Library Editions of Standard Literature.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ANTI-METHODIST WORKS.

All bibliographies are of interest to the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and especially interesting to many readers of our Export Number may be 'Anti-Methodist Publications issued during the 18th Century.' There are more followers of John Wesley in America than in England; in fact, the only other publication dealing exclusively with Anti-Methodist literature was printed in America, at Philadelphia, in 1846, by one John Pennington. It was a 'Catalogue of Works in Refutation of Methodism, from 1729 to the present time, compiled by H. C. Decanver,' imp. 8vo., pp. 54. The compiler of 1849, who used the nom de guerre of Decanver, was an opponent of the Methodists. The compiler of 1902 is a minister of that body. Decanver catalogued 485 publications, of which only 270 are within the scope of the Rev. R. Green's list. Mr. Green catalogues 606 works, has interesting notes upon some of them, and fills the last 16 pages of his work with an excellent index.

Mr. Green's will be a very useful book to anyone who has access to some such library as that of the British Museum in London or the P. E. C. Theological Seminary in New York, and who wishes to add local (or contemporary) colour to history or fiction dealing with days of early Methodists.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons have just added to their New Century Library on India paper Charles Dickens's Tale of Two Cities. Other volumes, such as Carlyle's French Revolution and the Adventures of Don Quixote de la Mancha are also announced for immediate publication. The volumes of the New Century Library are of pocket size, printed in large type on the thinnest printing paper in the world. The advantages of the New Century Library will be recognised at once. Volumes containing between 800 and 900 pages measure only 4½ by 6½ inches, and are just over ½ inch in thickness (including the cover). For the first time book-buyers can obtain each novel of Thackeray, Dickens, and Scott complete in one volume of large type and pocket size. In the longest New Century Library volume, Nelson's India paper used is so thin that 1,600 pages are only 1 inch thick. This is the thinnest printing paper in the world, yet it is perfectly opaque and very strong. Economy of space is a great advantage effected by the New Century Books, thus the complete works of Thackeray in 14 volumes only occupy a space of 10 inches in a bookcase. The extreme lightness of Nelson's India Paper makes the New Century Library specially suitable for pocket use.

Mr. John Hogg.

Mr. John Hogg has two further volumes for the Artistic Craft Series in active preparation, to be issued in due course, namely, Writing and Illuminating, by Edward Johnston, and Wood-Carving, &c., by George Jack. Each book, like the others in the series, is by an expert, and will be fully illustrated.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Gerald Dou,' by W. Martin, Litt.D., translated from the Dutch by Clara Bell. Not only is an interesting account given in this volume of Dou's life and principal paintings, but the author has endeavoured, with gratifying success, to afford some idea of the art surroundings of the period. The opening chapter he devotes to a concise but instructive survey of art in Holland, and especially in Leyden, during the seventeenth century. Dou's life he divides into two portions—that before 1631; when he was so much under the influence of Rembrandt, and the period following 1631 up to the time of his death. In succeeding chapters he speaks of the technique of the painter's studio—the canvas or panel then used, models for study, preparation of the paint, &c.; Dou's pupils and followers; and the prices his pictures have made, with the names of the chief purchasers. This is supplemented by a catalogue of his works and an appendix containing a list of the pictures by Dou returned to Spiering by Queen Christina in 1652. Upwards of forty illustrations are included in the volume, being finely-executed reproductions of the painter's best known works, and in the excellence of its all-round production the book is well worthy of the series of 'Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture,' to which it imparts further distinction.

From the same.—'History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella the Catholic,' by William H. Prescott. Edited by John Foster Kirk. 3 vols. It is difficult to realise that sixty-four years have passed away since this history first saw the light. This is nevertheless the case as shown by the date, November 1837, at the foot of the Preface to the First Edition, which figures in the first of this handsome reprint of three volumes lying before us. Any words of commendation here on what has long since become a recognised standard work were superfluous.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'Blackie's Little French Classics.' To their useful series of 'Little French Classics' the publishers have added Théophile Gautier's pretty Chinese story, 'Le Pavillon sur l'Eau,' edited by W. G. Hartog; Brueys and Palaprat's 'L'Avocat Patelin,' edited by E. B. Le François; Bossuet's 'Oraisons funèbres,' selections, edited by Rev. H. J. Chaytor; and Victor Hugo's 'Waterloo,' that vivid account of the battle extracted from 'Les Misérables,' and edited by G. H. Clarke. This series is so well edited and got up, and is so cheap, that it ought to be largely patronised.

From the same.—'Blackie's Three Division Arithmetic,' Books I., II., III. The object of these books is to enable the teachers of small schools to divide the children into three groups, instead of six or seven standards, for instruction in arithmetic. It is stated that the average scholar should not require more than one year over Book I., nor more than two years over each of the other two books. Considering the simple character of most of the exercises, this certainly seems amply sufficient time. Yet it is added: 'If he remains longer at school he should recapitulate the whole of Book III.' We gladly note, however, that this is left to the teacher's discretion.

From the same.—'The Circle Series of Science Note Books.' There are three of these Science Note Books, respectively ruled in squares of one-tenth of an inch, one quarter of an inch, and in centimetres. We should think they would be very useful, and the price is extremely low.

From Messrs. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.—'Monologues of the Dead,' by G. W. Steevens.

This book is the seventh volume of the Memorial Edition of the works of perhaps the most brilliant journalist of modern times. The sketches 'previously appeared either in the National Observer, during the editorship of Mr. W. E. Henley, or in the New Review.' They are wonderfully clever monologues of famous characters in ancient history—Troilus, Alcibiades, Xanthippe, Cæsar, Brutus, Agrippa, &c. The following extract from the Nero monologue will give some idea of Mr. Steevens' quality. 'But you cannot mean it? You cannot surely wish me to dispose myself in this unbeautiful hole? Regard it; how vulgar, how bare and malodorous, how nakedly undistinguished it is! Well, well; I can accommodate myself to necessity. After all, there is something piquant in the idea that the artist Emperor should take up his last—his ultimate halting in a derelict lean-to. Aptlier 'twould have fitted me, maybe, to die a Sardanapalus death, lyre in hand, in satins of vert and violet, and the scent, I think, cassia or myrrh.' This monologue and that spoken by Xanthippe are, we think, the best in the volume.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Some Intervention in English Education: a Short History from the Earliest Times down to 1833,' by J. E. G. de Montmorency, B.A., LL.B. The subject of education is just now very prominent in people's minds, and Mr. Montmorency's work therefore comes at an opportune moment. It is certainly strange, as he points out in his preface, that there should be no complete history of State-aided education in England; and no doubt such a book, had it existed some seventy years ago, and had its lessons been sufficiently taken to heart, would have saved this country much of her present educational trouble. 'Many of the mistakes of fact, many of the errors of policy that crowd into view, when we survey the educational history of these years,' writes our author, 'appear to have been directly due to the neglect of the historical aspect of National Education. The repetition of errors is inevitable if the record of the past is neglected. Be this as it may—and we are far from agreeing with Mr. Montmorency in all his contentions—there can be little question that a knowledge of the early relationship between State and education in this country is of vast importance in determining a rightful conception of the subject. We have therefore every appreciation of the effort made in this volume, even in a minor degree, to remedy a deficiency of the past. The book is divided into seven chapters. In the first the author considers the connection between education and the State from Saxon times to the end of the fourteenth century; in the second he discusses the Common Law of Education as exhibited in the fifteenth century; in the third he shows the influence exercised by the State over education during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; and the fourth he devotes to a consideration of the beginnings of State education in Scotland, Ireland, the Colonies, the Isle of Man, and Jersey. From this point we get more, as it were, into the stream of the subject. Chapter V. takes up the topic of education in the eighteenth century, and remaining chapters are respectively occupied with a description of the rise of elementary education in England and the efforts of Parliament in this direction. It will thus be seen that the book, though comparatively small in size, affords a very comprehensive survey of its subject. We can with confidence recommend it to all who are interested in one of the most important questions of the day, and they are certain to derive no little information from its pages.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.—'Britain at Work: a Pictorial Description of our National Industries.' Part I. This opening part of a work that promises to be one of the most successful that Messrs. Cassell, already celebrated for the excellence of their serial publications, have yet issued, shows a very attractive variety of contents. Mr. H. W. Wilson leads the way with a highly interesting account of the building of a battleship, and this is followed by articles on land cultivation, the manufacture of Irish linen, and the coal mining industry, respectively contributed by Mr. John Wrightson, Mr. Alfred S. Moore, and Mr. John Pendleton. The illustrations, so lavishly distributed throughout the number, are especially good, and in addition readers are presented with a fine Rembrandt photogravure of the well-known painting by W. L. Wyllie, A.R.A., 'The Birth of a Titan.'

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Shillelagh and Shamrock,' by M. McD. Bodkin, K.C. Under this title the author has given us a collection of Irish stories—some pathetic, some rollicking, but all genuinely characteristic of the Hibernian temperament. Nor has the superstitious element by any means been omitted, for in the opening narrative we have the description of a young girl who was led by dire necessity to seek the assistance of a holy well, which, having been blessed by a saint, was supposed to have the power of conferring relief on the afflicted. In Eileen O'Connor's case certainly the prayers offered up at the side of the sacred water seem to have had a marvellous result, since, from being a poor bare-footed child and the daughter of humble parents, she rose to be the highly-honoured wife of a rich landed proprietor. Mr. Bodkin's stories are not perhaps very artistic in their execution, but they have that healthy glow and vigour, that sympathy with Irish thought and humour, which is bound to win them approval from a large circle of readers.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Tutorial Press, Ltd.).—'Cæsar: Civil War, Book I,' edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A. This edition of the First Book of Cæsar merits unstinted commendation no less on account of its clear type and careful printing than for the admirable notes with which the text is supplied. Mr. Allcroft is an experienced hand at this form of work, and knows exactly how to be most helpful to the ordinary student. In his introduction he gives some particulars of Cæsar's career, and of the most important personages mentioned in the book. Like all the issues of the 'University Tutorial Series,' the volume is remarkable for its thoroughly practical character.

From the same.—'Matriculation Directory, No. XXXI., January 1902, with List of Text-books, including the Special Subjects for June 1902 and June 1903.' This useful and reliable guide, issued under the auspices of that very successful institution the University Correspondence College, is by this time so well known and so highly appreciated as to stand in little need of any eulogy. Suffice it to say that an introduction imparts wise counsels to private students on the right use of the text-books recommended in a list which follows; that an Abstract of the Regulations for Matriculation, together with Instructions to Candidates for examination, are given; to which succeed the Papers set in January 1902 and their Solutions by Tutors of the University Correspondence College. This Matriculation Directory must be quite invaluable to candidates.

From the same.—'A Text-Book of Magnetism and Electricity,' with 170 illustrations and numerous examples, by R. Wallace Stewart, D.Sc.Lond., 5th edition. This is apparently a reprint of the enlarged fourth edition of this useful elementary manual, which forms a companion volume to the same author's simple and concise Text-Books of Light and Heat, and is the fourth volume of the series of 'Tutorial Physics' of which Dr. Stewart is the general editor. It is clearly printed and well illustrated.

From the same.—'Tacitus: Histories, Book II,' edited by W. H. Balgarnie, M.A., Lond. and Camb. In common with the other volumes of the useful and excellent 'University Tutorial Series of Greek and Latin Classics,' that before us contains a concise introduction, in which the student finds an account of Tacitus, his works, authorities, and style; particulars of the government of the Roman Empire, of the Army, and of the Emperors from Galba to Vespasian. The notes are terse and to the point; information as to proper and place names is given in an historical and geographical index, thus rendering the purchase of a classical dictionary unnecessary; and an appendix embodies typical peculiarities in the grammar.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Poultry Management on a Farm,' by Walter Palmer, M.P. 'The purposes of the following pages is to present in a brief form the actual working experience of treating poultry as a part of ordinary farm management.' Mr. Palmer's little book is a succinct account of three years' work with poultry, and it is written with the intention of giving assistance to those who have had no previous experience in this branch of farm work. It is illustrated by photographs, and the practical results are set forth by balance sheets showing the working of each year. Contrary to general experience, Mr. Palmer has been very successful with his poultry: he finds that when 'worked as an adjunct to other branches of farming it pays well, when properly undertaken, and should be treated as part of the income upon which the farmer can rely.' He points out that there are 90,000 farms of between 100 and 500 acres in this country; the owners of these should purchase Mr. Palmer's book if they have hitherto found poultry management not worth the candle. They will learn much from it.

From the same.—'A Book of Stories,' by G. S. Street. Mr. Street's stories, though not quite free from an affectation of style which has oft-times proved irritating, are so dexterously handled, and possess such a delicate suggestive touch, that they are certain to charm readers who would play with the emotions of life rather than probe them to their depths. The fiction lover of to-day is mostly averse to deep thinking, but he is highly sensitive to impressions, and it pleases him to imagine that he has a knowledge of the philosophy of life. Mr. Street's first story, 'Like to Like,' shows how a young girl, of a somewhat independent, rakish disposition, gradually gravitates towards a young man of a similar nature, despite the intervention of a respectable, if slightly plebeian lover, and how they eventually elope together. The story commences well, but tails off towards the finish. Of the remaining contents, 'Two Sorts of Life' appears for the first time (the other stories have previously appeared in magazines), and is a fair specimen of Mr. Street's powers as a writer of fiction, without being in any way remarkable. We can recommend the volume to all who like their sensibilities gently ruffled and not violently disturbed.

From the same.—'Tiberius the Tyrant,' by J. C. Tarver. We shall perhaps be forgiven for saying that we have found the introduction which occupies some seventy-eight pages, the most interesting portion of this volume. Not but what the actual account of Tiberius when we get to it is excellently written, with a true appreciation of the subject, and sound critical judgment, but it naturally lacks the wider interest attaching to the introductory part. In this the author discusses the subjects respectively of the expansion of Rome and the Equestrian Order, the Roman people, the Senate, and Slavery. We are tempted to quote what he says in his opening remarks on the last-named subject, not only because they will well bear reflection, but because they furnish some idea of the way in which he has treated his subject generally. 'The politician of to-day is as incapable of imagining a wholesome state of Society in which slavery is a recognised and universal institution as he is of believing that any political constitution can be really good without representative government. The Romans, however, contrived to civilise the world, as far as it was accessible to them, without representative government and with slavery. Slavery is, in fact, a necessary condition in the evolution of civilised Society, and was an important factor in the evolution of the Roman Empire.' Mr. Tarver then proceeds to point out the character of slavery as it existed in antiquity, and its difference from the conditions obtaining in America or other countries. Coming to the life proper, he first gives some account of Tiberius's parents and childhood, and then traces his remarkable career step by step, until his death at the villa of Lucullus, whither he had removed from the island of Capreae. Of the many charges of excess brought against the Emperor in his later years, and the great cruelties of which he was supposed to be guilty, Mr. Tarver is very sceptical. His work throughout displays a close and intelligent study of his subject, and it is evident that neither time nor labour has been spared in striving to arrive at an accurate conception of the Emperor's character. But, all the same, many of his deductions are by no means likely to pass unchallenged.

PALL MALL GAZETTE says: 'It is always a pleasure to be able to give a good book a good welcome. When the book in question is the first work of a new writer, as we think is the case with "The Inconsequences of Sara," the pleasure is greatly intensified. Miss May is to be most heartily congratulated on her incursion into fiction. Her novel is one of the smartest and most amusing pieces of work that have appeared for some considerable time; her heroine the most delightful since Mr. Anthony Hope burst upon us with Dolly. . . . No more promising work has come from a woman writer since the tales of John Oliver Hobbes.'

LADIES' FIELD says: "'The Inconsequences of Sara" is a novel of undeniable cleverness.'

F. E. ROBINSON & CO.,

THE RUSSELL PRESS, 20 Great Russell Street, London.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'To-day and To-morrow,' by Eleanor Holmes. One great advantage this novel possesses—the interest increases as the story advances, until at length the reader will find himself so involved in the love entanglements of Major Noel Heronden that he will not be satisfied until he has reached the last page. A curious man, the Major. In his younger days he has been somewhat of a flirt, and even now, at what should be the sedate age of forty-four, he still shows a keen appreciation of a pretty woman. But in his efforts to get married he is singularly unfortunate. In his younger days he had been desperately fond of a beautiful young girl who had been deceived by untrue reports concerning him, and had united herself to another. Then he had had une affaire with a married woman. At the time the story opens we find him gradually becoming enamoured of a gifted artist. But just when he is on the point of laying his heart and fortune at her feet he discovers that she is already engaged. He then proposes to a former flame, whose insidious beauty had charm enough for him in the old days, but has scarcely power enough to make his heart beat one throb the faster now. Finally, he comes across a dear, sweet innocent little girl of twenty-two with whom he falls passionately in love, but is debarred by his engagement and other circumstances from marrying. The author, however, has not the heart to end her story in gloom, and the entanglements are very effectually smoothed out.

From the same.—'Dear Paul,' by G. Beresford Fitzgerald. 'Dear Paul' is the son of Catherine Dease, a widow of limited means. On page 7 Paul is a magnificent boy of fifteen; on page 24, two or three days later, he is sixteen, though this birthday has not been mentioned in the meantime. It is a small matter, but it is characteristic of the author—that is to say, he writes carelessly, and with no sense of reality. His grammar is weak, his style is execrable, and he has failed to interest us. This is a pity, as he is the author of at least five previous works; but perhaps this is an earlier book which he has until now kept in the background.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'Tricked: a Sporting and Military Novel,' by Fox Russell. The officers of the 14th Dragoons are discussing after mess, in the ante-room of the cavalry barracks of that excellent hunting centre, Thorpe Wendon, the chances of the horses belonging to the regiment likely to start in the Grand Military Steeplechase meeting at Sandown Park. Of these Caliban, owned by Captain Levison Mends, a handsome officer of rather pronounced Jewish features, is most favourably mentioned; but the owner remarks that his trainer has told him that Caliban is not half fit, and so he does not advise anyone to back it; and, declining to say who will ride it, leaves the room. Mends was reputed to be rich, but was voted mean, was unpopular with the officers, and hated by the men of his regiment. After he has left the room Captain Sir Piers Holmby, a young baronet with an encumbered estate, declares his intention of beating Caliban on his own horse Rambler. The race comes off, and Sir Piers on Rambler wins by a short neck.

Here let us note that Mr. Fox Russell graphically describes the races at Sandown Park as well as the spectators, both military and civil. Among these are the Earl and Countess of Bellfield, their daughter, Lady Sybil, and their son, Lord Daneley, who rides in one of the races and would have fallen off his horse, for the girth broke at the first fence, had not Sir Piers noticed before the start that they were not safe and lent the young man his surcingle; for which act of kindness Lord Daneley and his sister are duly grateful. Captain Mends, however, vows vengeance, for Sir Piers has lost him the race and is his rival, the Captain meaning to marry Lady Sybil. After this, Captain Mends, whose real name is Mendoza, he being son of a Jewish moneylender, Israel Mendoza (a finely-conceived character and a far better man than the Captain), plots the ruin of Sir Piers, who is already deeply involved, and to get Lord Daneley into his power—for he, too, is in debt—and through him to obtain possession of Sybil. Meanwhile Mr. Samson Brakeshaw, M.P., trustee of the Holmby estates, is planning to get Sir Piers to marry his daughter Aureana. Failing in this scheme—for Sir Piers does not bid for the hundred thousand pounds which her father tells him will be Aureana's dower—the dishonest trustee suborns evidence to prove Sir Piers illegitimate. How the two rogues are checkmated is capitally told in this very readable melodramatic recital of the good old-fashioned type, in which the rightful heir comes by his own, and the moneylenders and villains who lay nets for others are taken in their own toils.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Dr. Nikola's Experiment,' by Guy Boothby. In the advertisements we are told that Mr. Boothby's tales sell like 'hot cakes'; they do. Here we have a new and cheaper edition of one of his most popular stories. Mr. Sidney Cowell has illustrated the volume, and it is sufficient praise if we say he plays well up to Mr. Boothby.

From Mr. John Hogg.—'Morris as Work Master.' A lecture delivered by W. R. Lethaby at the Birmingham Municipal School of Art on October 26, 1901. It were difficult to find in such narrow compass so much information about William Morris as is brought together in this lecture. Here we are told of his early boyhood in Essex, when he rode over half the county in search of old churches; of his Oxford friendships; of his brief architectural and long poetical and decorative career; of the Red House at Bexley Heath, and its artist decorators; and of the famous firm, Morris & Co. The lecturer has a thorough mastery of his subject, and herein resembles William Morris himself, who is called by Mr. Lethaby a 'Work Master' because he mastered all he took in hand, and was no 'Jack of all trades and master of none.'

From the same.—'The Study and Practice of Artistic Crafts.' An address delivered by W. R. Lethaby to the students of the Birmingham Municipal School of Art on February 15, 1901. Mr. Lethaby possesses the faculty of being concise without being dull. This address is as interesting as it is informing.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett, Ltd.—'The Silent Battle,' by Mrs. C. N. Williamson. The villain of this story is of the order that may well be styled persistent. He takes an unholy liking for a young actress, and, being a man of immense wealth, he is enabled to carry his attentions to the bounds of persecution. In the first place, he obtains her dismissal from the theatre where she is engaged (having previously offered her the part of Rosalind in 'As You Like It' and much worldly advantage if she will only agree to his infamous proposals), and then, when she and her invalid mother are reduced to great poverty, he causes an offer to be made to her to play 'Mazeppa' in a grand revival of that play at Brighton, which she, poor girl, being quite ignorant of the nature of the part, contracts, to do, and draws part of her salary in advance. Even to the very last they keep from her the simplicity of the dress she has to wear when strapped on the back of the fiery untamed steed, with the result that on the night of the performance she refuses to go on. Then the manager raves and storms, and she faints away. The dresser is told to get the dress on her at all costs; but the woman, though old and hardened, has yet a spark of feeling in her rugged breast. She assists the poor heroine to escape from the theatre. Meanwhile the villain is in front gloating over his coming triumph. He writes his victim a letter saying that even yet he can save her from the public degradation if she will only consent to be his. Anon he learns to his intense mortification that she has disappeared. When next discovered she is singing in the street, accompanied by a gallant young man who has come from America with a message from a mysterious 'F. E. Z.' Who the person with this limited designation is, how the villain comes by his just deserts in the smash-up of his 'racing Panhard auto-car of fifty-horse power,' and what happens to the beautiful heroine, the reader must be left to find out for himself. Mrs. Williamson can do much better work than this, as her previous novels testify, but at least it has the merit of infinite vivacity and 'go.'

From Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh.—'George Heriot's Hospital: Memories of a Modern Monk, being Reminiscences of Life in the Hospital,' by Clement B. Gunn, M.D. Most people at the present day, even of those associated with Edinburgh, know George Heriot's Hospital only as a large secondary school. They forget that it was originally founded by the benevolent jeweller of James I. as an educational home for fatherless boys. In the days before an Act of Parliament completely altered the character of the institution, the system pursued had much of the monastic element. Hence the name bestowed by Dr. Gunn on himself in the second title of his work. There are no juvenile monks in connection with the Hospital now. Such fatherless boys as are educated under the old dispensation are boarded out. The Hospital as a home no longer exists. Many readers will no doubt be glad to hear of the charity as it was formerly conducted. They will also, under Dr. Gunn's pleasant guidance, learn much of the structural character of the building; being successively introduced to the Chapel, the Refectory or Dining Hall, the Dormitories, the Schoolrooms, the Quadrangle, and so forth. The graphic description of these places, and the life associated with them, is much enhanced by numerous illustrations. In one of the later chapters Dr. Gunn makes mention of two famous men who received their education and early training at the institution—Sir Henry Raeburn and Mr. Lawson Tait. In addition to the 'Memories,' Mr. Hippolyte J. Blanc, R.S.A., supplies an extremely valuable description of the Hospital from an architectural standpoint, illustrated with measured drawings by R. S. Balfour, and Major Bedford, M.D., contributes a memoir of his father, Dr. F. W. Bedford, the last House Governor, whose portrait is given. Evidently no pains have been spared by the publishers to render the volume artistically attractive.

From Mr. John Long.—'A Beautiful Rebel,' by Ernest Glanville. The scene of Mr. Glanville's story is laid in the Transvaal. For certain reasons, the hero, Frank Maynard, has incurred the enmity of Bertie Frowenthal, an unscrupulous financier, and Karl Weber, a rascally Jew, who is hand and glove with the Boers at Pretoria. It is the desire of this precious couple to lure Maynard to Johannesburg, where he is certain to be arrested by the authorities as an offender against the State, and for this purpose they utilise the services of an extremely fascinating Irish girl, 'A Beautiful Rebel.' Maynard does not exactly fall into the trap, but he returns to the Transvaal all the same, and his adventures, which are of a very stirring character, form the subject-matter of the story. The reader will certainly be kept very wide awake as he threads his way through the book, and a gleam of very acceptable romantic interest is imparted to the narrative by the presence of Kate Ronnell. That Maynard should ultimately marry the girl who has previously been conspiring against him is quite in the natural order of things.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Boswell's Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides,' with notes and biographical sketch by H. B. Cotterill, M.A. A compact, handy edition, well printed and neatly bound, for the use of teachers and students. Mr. Cotterill has confined his account of Boswell within reasonable bounds, and his notes, while satisfying all the requirements of the case, are commendably brief and to the purpose. As an edition for educational purposes nothing could possibly be better.

From Mr. John Murray.—'A Short History of Coins and Currency,' by Lord Avebury. This volume of 'Murray's Home and School Library' is divided into two parts. In the first the author treats of the origin of money and the coinage of Britain, while in the second he directs attention to the weights of coins and the question of bank notes and banking. It has not been unusual, he points out, for Kings and Parliaments to attempt to secure a temporary and dishonourable advantage by debasing the standard and reducing the weight of the coins, but from such practices we are glad to be told our own country has been remarkably free. Those who imagine that a history of coins must necessarily be of a dry-as-dust character should purchase this little volume, and they will speedily be disabused of the idea. Numerous illustrations add to the interest of the text, and in every way the manual, considering its size, has been made as attractive as possible. The book, we should mention, is founded on an introductory address which Lord Avebury delivered some time ago as first President of the Institute of Bankers, and subsequently largely remodelled for a lecture at the London Institute last year.

From Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.—'The World and its People.' We have rarely come across so delightful a geography reader as this: the coloured illustrations are exceedingly beautiful, and the relief maps excellently produced. The book is intended for young children, and fulfils its purpose well. We have read it from first page to last, and found it fascinating. We particularly admire the author's plan of inserting pictures illustrating the industries of the various countries with which he deals, and the many photographs of public buildings, landscapes, &c., are produced with excellent effect. For the price the book is a wonderful production, and we wish it every success.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Jim the Penman,' the life-story of one of the most astounding criminals that ever lived, by Dick Donovan. The real name of the hero of Dick Donovan's new story is James Hugh, whose father, a handsome, clever, peace-loving Irish gentleman, with large estates, had been ruined by the land agitation. The boy was fond of chemistry, his father gave him a good education, and James thought of entering the army. However, the father dying early of a broken heart, and the son coming into a small fortune from a relative, and having no one able to control him, went off to Paris; and, having spent his all, fell in love with and married a beautiful demi-mondaine, Therèse Pleon. Hugh had taken the name of 'Captain Bevan'; and, after his marriage and birth of a daughter, Marie, the three lived for some years in the best style and in the best part of Paris 'upon credit,' which had well-nigh come to an end when the tale opens with a scene between Captain Bevan and his wife, whom he charges with being extravagant, ambitious, and daring. In fact, Madame Bevan resembles Mrs. Rawdon Crawley in knowing not only how to live well on nothing a year, but also in some other respects. When the Captain tells her he is sick of her extravagance and having to live on credit, while all he wants is to spend his time in the laboratory, and that she and her daughter must go one way and he another, she sends for her daughter, 'who is a vision of gilded beauty' just seventeen, and says that the girl's brilliant father, hitherto a light of society, is about to desert his wife and daughter, who must become washer-women or seamstresses. Whereat Marie Bevan throws herself on her knees at her father's feet, moaning 'What does this mean?' while the Captain collapses, sobs, and, like Mr. Mantalini, threatens suicide. Madame says he ought to be ashamed of himself, and tells him she will show him how to help himself. He asks in what way. Then she asks him to meet her and a friend at seven that night at the Maison Dorée. He agrees, and, although he arrives late, his wife's friend,

M. Charles Agave, a cosmopolitan Englishman, at once offers to lend him £400 on his I.O.U., desiring to relieve him from financial worry, firstly, for his wife's sake, and, secondly, because he may need his services later on. The service required is the secret of removing figures or writing from documents without injuring them, and of substituting other figures and signatures for those removed. Aided by his chemical knowledge, Jim the Penman discovers this secret, with what results to himself, Charles Agave, and other confederates must be learnt from this very sensational but rather sordid story, which has a subsidiary plot dealing with the fortunes of Marie Bevan, her lover Wilfrid Leonard, and his aunt Countess Graccioli. It seems a pity that so clever a story-teller should not find worthier subjects for his ability than Jim the Penman.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'Crowning the King,' by Arthur H. Beavan. This is a work manifestly written in view of the approaching Coronation. It contains much interesting information in regard to similar ceremonies in the past, coronation processions and banquets, the crown jewels, ancient and modern thrones, royal and pre-latic coronation vestments, the more notable Archbishops of Canterbury and York who have officiated on the occasion, and the associations of Westminster Abbey. Many curious observances are mentioned. It was formerly usual, for instance, in accordance with a custom of feudal origin, to serve up to the king at the royal banquet a mess of grout or dillegroust—a species of gruel flavoured with dill, supposed to be a sovereign cure for soothing pains in the stomach—but as his Majesty always refused the dish the custom happily came to be discontinued. To the attraction of a subject interesting in itself Mr. Beavan has added something of a charm of graceful narration, and several illustrations serve to give further effect to his work.

From the same.—'On the Old Trail,' by Bret Harte. Many years ago Mr. E. S. Dallas, husband of Miss Glynn, complained, when editing Once a Week, that it was almost impossible to get a good short story, since it was much more profitable for the author to expand his idea into a three-volume novel. Whether the present one-volume fiction has had any influence in improving this state of affairs we are not prepared to say, but certain it is that there are any number of effective short stories published just now. Mr. Bret Harte's tales scarcely depend so much perhaps upon construction as on the broad humanity he displays with certain phases of vigorous uncultivated life, and so scarcely come within this category; but they are admirable specimens of artistic handling. Readers will find his present collection of stories as powerful to enlist their sympathies as in days gone by, and the charm of their local colouring is conspicuous as ever. A more fascinating volume for after-dinner perusal it would be difficult to name.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'A Memorial to William Steinitz,' containing a Selection of his Games chronologically arranged, with an Analysis of Play, edited by Charles Devidé. Lovers of chess will derive much pleasure from this volume. It forms a worthy tribute to the ability of a man 'who for nearly thirty years ruled the chess world, who firmly impressed the game with the indelible stamp of his own individuality, and who moulded and reshaped the theory and style of play.' It was Mr. Devidé's original intention, as we understand from his preface, to have given a much fuller account of Steinitz's life and personality than at present appears; but as this could only have been done by the omission of some of the games we think it was far better to let matters stand as they are. Steinitz's abilities as a chess player are quite sufficiently demonstrated in this way, and there is no necessity for comment. About sixty games are included altogether, many of them being played against such masters of the art as Blackburne, Lasker, Gunsberg, Zukertort, Wisker, Paulsen, Mackenzie, Anderssen, Pillsbury, and Tchigorin. A frontispiece portrait of Steinitz is given with the volume, and there are numerous diagrams.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'A New Trafalgar: a Tale of the Torpedo Fleet,' by A. C. Curtis. This is not exactly a good story, seeing that its construction is of the slightest, and that it depends for its interest on a succession of incidents rather than a well-sustained plot, and yet it possesses many of the features that make for success. The events are brilliant and exciting, the movements rapid and vigorous, and over all there hangs a most exhilarating atmosphere of patriotism. This country is supposed in the first place to be at war with Germany, whose fleet is pretty well annihilated by our battleships, destroyers, and torpedo-boats, while their land forces are equally smashed up on the outskirts of London, and some sixty thousand men surrender! All this is distinctly refreshing. Then France and Russia join in, but, nothing daunted, Great Britain gallantly faces her triple foe, eventually emerging from the contest with complete success, though at a cost of thousands of valuable lives. A fine spirit of heroism distinguishes the narrative. Mr. Curtis evidently is still of opinion that one Britisher is equal to any number of Frenchmen. The hero, in command of a destroyer, runs the greatest risks, but invariably comes off conqueror. Lord Charles Beresford and the 'Condor' at Alexandria are miles behind him. Blood streams along the deck, dead bodies lie thick upon one another, but there he is, a gallant figure, ever foremost in the fight, ever cheering on his men, always successful in his manœuvres, a force that no enemy's ship can resist. It is inspiring, but not altogether natural, and perhaps there is a little too much of it. Eventually the hero, having passed through this charmed existence, is invalided home, and marries the bright, attractive daughter of an admiral. Towards the end, however, there are indications of his speedy return to active service. To hope that he will pass through such hazardous experiences with safety a second time would be madness—excepting in fiction, where anything may happen. But Mr. Curtis has led us a breezy, exhilarating dance, and we are grateful to him. We believe in our country again.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Labour Legislation, Labour Movements, and Labour

Leaders,' by George Howell, F.S.S. The author relates this informative 'story of labour's struggles, its victories and defeats,' from an intimate knowledge of his subject. For half a century his life has been closely bound up with the interests of the working man, and he has largely aided in his efforts to obtain a more unfettered form of existence. His work is 'an attempt to trace progressive legislation from the date of the first repeal of the Combined Laws in 1824 to the present] time.' In order that the reader may gain a comprehensive view of the subject, some space in the opening chapters has been devoted to a consideration of the nature of the laws adverse to labour as they existed at the close of the eighteenth and during the first quarter of the nineteenth centuries. Mr. Howell seems to think that the amount of attention he has bestowed on this branch of his topic may possibly be cavilled at, but for our part we are glad of the full and circumstantial manner in which, as it were, he sets out his plan of campaign. It forms, we are inclined to believe, one of the most valuable portions of his work, for of later events in the labour world we have ample chronicle, while of early legislation in this direction, and the movements springing therefrom, our information up to the present has been scattered and fragmentary. From chapter xiii. onwards Mr. Howell describes the growth of the labour revolt, the development of trade unionism, and the efforts made to arrest it. This is mostly shown by a reference to well-known cases in which the offenders were put on their trial for their efforts to release themselves and their fellow-labourers from thralldom. Naturally the book becomes more absorbing as we approach more recent years. Passing over the striking events of the forties, fifties, and sixties, we come to the great struggle over the repeal of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, of which a highly interesting and trustworthy account is given. Then follow the labour movements of succeeding years: the story of the gas-stokers' prosecution, the formation of the Agricultural Labourers' Union, Mr. Plimsoll's efforts on behalf of seamen, and so forth. We have said enough to show the highly attractive character of Mr. Howell's volume, and may with confidence recommend it to all who are interested in the welfare of the working classes.

From the same.—'The Insane Root,' by Mrs. Campbell Praed. The insane root is a mandrake, and it plays a very curious part in this extravagant story of passionate love, impossible science, and deeply-planned intrigue. The plot is frankly absurd—at least, so it appears to us; but it is very skilful, and Mrs. Praed can carry off a good deal of improbability with an air of assuring conviction. The keynote of the book is struck by the frontispiece—a photograph of three mandrake-roots from Palestine. They are shaped like young children, and are sufficiently weird in appearance to suggest strange thoughts. But Mrs. Praed asks us to believe too much.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'The Motor Car: an Elementary Handbook on its Nature, Use, and Management,' by Sir Henry Thompson, Bart., F.R.C.S. The scientific man is naturally of an inquiring mind. The author of this little volume, having become possessed of a motor car, was soon curious to learn the causes of its movements, and before long had thoroughly studied its internal economy. This being done, his next thought, with the ardour of an enthusiast, was to communicate his knowledge to others, and the highly satisfactory result now lies before us. The main practical portion of the volume lies in the section on the different varieties of motor car in use; but there is also a serviceable list of motor routes from London, and in his Times correspondence of last year, here reproduced, the author raises some interesting questions as regards the relationship between horse and motor. But surely Sir Henry Thompson is straining his advocacy a little when he speaks of carriage horses driven in the country at fifteen miles an hour! There are three illustrations to the volume, respectively showing the author's motor car, $6\frac{1}{2}$ H.P., the working parts of a $6\frac{1}{2}$ H.P. Daimler motor, and the interior of the gearing box.

From Messrs. Whittaker & Co.—'The School Calendar. A Year-Book of Scholarships and Examinations at Schools, Colleges, and Universities for the Year 1902.' Fifteenth Year of Publication. This useful publication gives under each day the examinations to be held on that day, and also the dates for returning forms. It contains an alphabetical list, under names of towns, of local, preliminary, and entrance examinations; an abstract of the chief Civil Service Examinations; gives particulars of Oxford and Cambridge School Examinations, University Extension Schemes, Public School Scholarships and Exhibitions, with particulars of annual value, tenure, age limits, &c.; Ladies' Colleges' Scholarships; Open Scholarships at the Universities; London School Board and County and Borough Council Scholarships; Open Scholarships at Medical Schools; and imparts much other educational information. It seems quite invaluable to all interested in education, whether parents, teachers, or students.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have issued a tenth edition, revised, of Mr. W. T. Lynn's admirable little work on 'Remarkable Comets: a Brief Survey of the most interesting facts in the History of Astronomy.'—We have received from Messrs. Macmillan & Co. a copy of their second edition of 'Practical Botany for Beginners,' by F. O. Bower, D.Sc., F.R.S., and D. T. Gwynne-Vaughan, M.A. In this the terminology has undergone considerable revision, and at the same time the material has been re-arranged, while some additional examples, mainly among the flowering plants, have been introduced.—To their especially neat, well-printed 'Windsor' edition of Harrison Ainsworth's novels Messrs. Gibbings have now added in two volumes 'Old St. Paul's,' one of the best of his works.—Vol. II. of the 'Exemplary Novels' of Cervantes, published by Messrs. Gowans & Gray, of Glasgow, in their 'Complete Library,' has reached us. Like previous issues, it is noticeable for its excellent printing and binding.—Messrs. Gale & Polden have sent out a third edition, revised and enlarged, of Major-General Hallam Parr's useful little work on 'The Further Training and Employment of Mounted Infantry and Yeomanry.'

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS

LORD MILNER AND SOUTH AFRICA

By E. B. IWAN-MÜLLER, M.A. With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Milner and Mr. Cecil Rhodes by Tennyson Cole. 1 vol. demy 8vo. 15s. net.

Almost without exception the many volumes on the subject of the campaign itself, and of the past and future relations between Great Britain and her possessions in South Africa, have started from a period, comparatively speaking, immediately anterior to the war. Few of them have realised that its germs were sown earlier than the Jameson Raid, and fewer still have traced the seeding back so far as the annexation and retrocession of the Transvaal.

In Mr. Iwan-Müller's 'Lord Milner and South Africa' an effort is made to examine the genealogy of the present situation as far back as 1815. In order to do justice to Lord Milner's policy it is essential to know not only how he handled the pieces he found upon the board, but how they came to be in the position in which he found them. The author's design has been to show how the two systems in Africa came into conflict, and how it happened that there were two systems. If by bringing into the light hidden or forgotten chapters of an intensely interesting history he has succeeded in demonstrating the existence of these two systems as an essential factor in South African politics, he will also have succeeded in proving that this war was just and inevitable, and that, though the crisis culminated under Lord Milner's administration, no statesman ever took greater pains to unravel a tangled problem by peaceful and conciliatory methods until Presidents Kruger and Steyn assumed the responsibility of trying the sword upon the Gordian knot.

ALL THE RUSSIAS

Travels and Studies of Contemporary Conditions and Problems in European Russia, Finland, Siberia, the Caucasus, and Central Asia.

By HENRY NORMAN, M.P., Author of 'Peoples and Problems of the Far East,' 'The Real Japan,' &c.

With many Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo. 18s. net.

[Next week.]

Mr. Henry Norman, M.P., in his new book deals with the pressing questions and problems, national and international, existing to-day in the vast Russian Empire. Having visited Russia four times during the past two years, he writes with special knowledge derived from exceptional opportunities.

This work deals with European Russia, Finland, Siberia, the Caucasus, and Central Asia, and discusses the relations of Russia and England with regard to India. The Siberian chapters contain a full account of the Trans-Siberian Railway, the greatest railway enterprise of the world, destined probably to effect a complete change in the relations of Europe and the Far East. The extraordinarily picturesque and varied groups of peoples and problems of the Caucasus also receive especial notice.

THE MASTERY OF THE PACIFIC

By ARCHIBALD R. COLQUHOUN, Author of 'The Overland to China' &c.

With 3 Maps and 122 Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings. 1 vol. demy 8vo. 18s. net.

TIMES.—'A valuable contribution to the political literature of the day. The political and commercial positions of the various Powers in the Pacific are clearly set forth in a manner which provides materials for forming a judgment as to the future.'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS By E. MARSTON.

The Illustrations include seven Portraits and a picture of Samuel Richardson's House at Fulham.

GLOBE.

'One of the daintiest books ever turned out by his firm.'

ATHENÆUM.

'Undeniably interesting.'

MORNING LEADER.

'Has a crisp primness of style and a gentle humour which are delightful in their way, and admirably adapted to their author's task.'

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

'The book is very good reading.'

DAILY MAIL.

'Mr. E. Marston writes this cheery little book about his predecessors.'

STANDARD.

'We are inclined to regret that Mr. Marston has not drawn from his own reminiscences of Paternoster Row, and what it represented in the mid-Victorian era.'

SCOTSMAN.

'It is made up of eight pleasant, often humorously-written, sketches of the lives of historic bibliopoles.'

ACADEMY.

'We thank him for a pleasant little book.'

FIELD.

'It is saying very much indeed to recommend, as we heartily do, these sketches as quite worthy of the subject and the author.'

SPHERE.

'How excellent I, at least, have found these "Sketches of Booksellers" may be judged from the fact that I cut out the articles as they appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, intending to preserve them.'

MORNING POST.

'Mr. Marston's very pleasing and readable little book, which is as prettily bound and nicely illustrated as it is agreeably conceived and written.'

GLASGOW HERALD.

'It is pleasantly written, and contains much out-of-the-way information.'

BOOKSELLER.

'Exceedingly interesting matter arranged in a chatty and readable form.'

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

'Pleasantly-discursive little "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days."'

Fcp. 8vo. Illustrated, and with Photogravure Frontispiece, half-parchment, cloth sides, gilt top, 5s. net. A few copies on Japanese Vellum, 10s. 6d. net.

Sketches of Some Booksellers OF THE TIME OF DR. JOHNSON.

By E. MARSTON,

Author of 'Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days.'

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

TIMES. April 4, 1902.

'The doyen of the London publishers has certainly a claim to be heard.'

MORNING POST. April 4, 1902.

'A highly attractive little volume for lovers of literature.'

ATHENÆUM. April 12, 1902.

DAILY NEWS. March 25, 1902.

GLOBE. March 24, 1902.

'To bookmen his little volume will be unfailingly attractive.'

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE. March 25, 1902.

'Mr. Marston hopes that he "has not wholly failed in presenting these sketches in a readable form." For ourselves we do not think that Mr. Marston could possibly have found a more readable form of presenting them.'

DAILY MAIL. April 8, 1902.

'Twelve pleasant little papers.'

SPECTATOR. March 30, 1902.

'This is a most readable volume.'

ACADEMY. March 29, 1902.

'Sometimes a second volume, or a sequel, seems to increase the value of its leader. This is the case with the little book with which Mr. Marston has followed his "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days."'

OUTLOOK. April 12, 1902.

'But it is not by his Johnsoniana alone that Mr. Marston holds one to his pages.'

BOOKSELLER. April 8, 1902.

'We congratulate Mr. Marston upon this happy result of his renewed labours.'

PILOT. April 5, 1902.

'The geniality which marks the pretty dedication written on his seventy-eighth birthday, to his "dear granddaughter," runs through the book and makes it pleasant reading.'

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. April 2, 1902.

'Not alone members of the trade, but all lovers of books will derive genuine pleasure from this little volume.'

SCOTSMAN. March 24, 1902.

GLASGOW HERALD. March 27, 1902.

'This delightful little volume.'

PEOPLE.

'There is a pleasant touch of sentiment in all Mr. Edward Marston's work.'

BIRMINGHAM POST.

'The work throughout will prove of much interest to students of the Johnsonian era.'

STAFFORDSHIRE ADVERTISER.

March 22, 1902.
'To all lovers of Dr. Johnson the book will come as a welcome guest. . . Mr. Marston has placed all admirers of Dr. Johnson and all lovers of books under the deepest obligation to him for this dainty little volume.'

BOOKS WANTED

REGULATIONS.

- BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
- Only one title will be inserted in each line.
- Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
- All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
- Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns, and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
- The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

BOOKS IN SERIES AND THE OUTLOOK.

It must often have puzzled a publisher to decide whether to bring out a new story by a new writer as an independent work or as one of some existing series, and it would be interesting to have the opinions of some of our bookselling readers on this point. Not so long ago it could safely be said that to add a good book to a good series, in uniform binding, was good for both book and series; the publisher could rely on selling a certain number, in fact almost a fixed number, on publication, he could tell to a hundred copies how many to print as a first edition of every new addition to the series, and this in spite of the fact that anything approaching uniformity of literary merit is impossible—even in books by the same author. This assured sale was of course a great advantage, and it undoubtedly led to the system of publishing in series called by some special name being overdone; we need not 'name names,' the 'Libraries' which are and have been called after favourite flowers, minerals (especially gems), colours, places, buildings, and persons are legion.

But the reading public is much more fickle than it used to be, the pretty floral design soon becomes 'old-fashioned,' even the reviewer, the jaded reviewer, thinks he has done his duty if he mentions that Messrs. So-and-So had added a volume by — to their library. If the particular volume had been published on its own hook with lurid lightnings on a lava-coloured cover we may be sure that it would have its place of honour on the bookstall, and in the bookseller's shop, and that the reviewer would have picked it out for at least half a column of faint praise or fainter blame.

There are exceptions, of course, but from the way 'series' of books in uniform bindings now 'tail off,' there can, we think, be little doubt that a book of merit stands a better chance of attention from the press and the public if it is published by itself with as much originality and distinction of appearance as possible. We have all noticed with amusement the efforts of the enterprising managers of some of Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son's bookstalls to tempt buyers of popular periodicals to take a book for a change. The neatly hand-printed cards stuck in the tops of volumes telling us that they are 'worth reading,' 'well worth reading,' 'distinctly clever,' 'daring in conception,' 'brilliant,' 'fascinating,' and so on appeal to us more or less, probably less; but they are signs of the times, they show how much more advertising the bookstall requires as compared with the periodical department. As the manager of a Lake District bookstall said to us the other day: 'We show them still,' waving his hand towards his rows of books, 'but this is what we chiefly sell,' and our eyes followed his over a perfect sea of periodicals. 'And here's our Government hampering business by a trumpery tax on cheques while the Yankees are quietly stealing the cream of our mercantile marine. Have you read the leader in the Courier? Very clever—glad to see somebody is awake to the position.' It does make one feel uncomfortable to find that great English shipping companies should be willing to sell our maritime birthright to the Yankees for a mess of pottage.

Are we to have rejoicings for peace as well as for the Coronation? We hope so, and a great increase in trade afterwards is by no means impossible or even improbable, judging from previous experiences. Already we hear that the Americans and Germans are preparing for another great campaign in South Africa with the object of capturing trade—but in this case they will find, we trust, that the British merchant has not forgotten the little story of the early bird and the worm. A very good indication of the feeling of merchants in South Africa as regards the future is that jubilee prices are being asked for building sites and business premises in Pretoria, Johannesburg, and Bloemfontein.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

More than two thousand copies of our Special Export Number of last week have been posted to the best booksellers, libraries, &c., in the British Colonies and Dependencies.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Part I. of 'Britain at Work,' just published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

Mrs. Gallup, who says that Bacon wrote Shakespeare, and Spenser, and Burton's 'Anatomy,' and a few other trifles, has proved too much for the patience—and the space—of the Times, which publishes the following notice:— 'Messrs. Gay & Bird have forwarded to us, with a request for early publication in the Times, the replies of Mrs. Gallup to three of her critics—namely, Mr. Candler, Mr. Marston, and Sir Henry Irving. The text of these replies, if they were printed in full, would require space equivalent to more than an ordinary number of the Times. Sir Henry Irving's and Mr. Candler's contributions to the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy did not appear in our columns. We could not in any case therefore undertake to find space for Mrs. Gallup to answer them, even if she did so at reasonable length. Even her reply to Mr. Marston alone is far too long for us to be able to publish it.'

Their Majesties the King and Queen have each accepted a copy of the Rev. S. Baring-Gould's illustrated Coronation Souvenir, and of Canon Hammond's illustrated booklet, 'How and Why our King will be Crowned.'

'The British Navy' is the title of a Coronation souvenir, by E. W. Hartnell, to be issued shortly, at the popular price of one shilling, by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., size oblong 4to., containing a classified list of all the ships in the navy, a large photo reproduction being given of each type, with particulars as to dimensions, displacement, horse-power, speed, complement, &c., &c.

Owners of automobiles who have trouble with the ignition arrangement of their machine, and do not possess sufficient experience to enable them to cope with the disagreeable and untimely breakdowns which so frequently occur, should read Mr. S. R. Bottone's article on 'Sparkign Coils for Motors' in the forthcoming number of the Young Engineer. A careful perusal of the article (which is accompanied by diagrams) will enable the motorist to at once repair any trifling mishap to the ignition coil when occasion demands. Full instructions are also given in the paper for making ignition coils giving $\frac{3}{8}$ -in. and 1-in. sparks respectively. The same issue of this periodical will contain a prize design for a motor-car house.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of 'Sir Walter's Wife,' by Miss Emily Richings. The book is published by Mr. Henry J. Drane, and is of special interest at the present time.

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have had the honour of sending to the King—in accordance with his Majesty's special command—a copy of the novel 'Ben-Hur,' upon which the play of that name now running at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, is founded. Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales have been graciously pleased to accord the same publishing house a similar favour.

Immediately after Whitsuntide Mr. Lane will publish a volume under the title of 'Persian Children of the Royal Family: being the Narrative of an English Tutor at the Court of H.I.H. Zillu's-Sultan, 'G.C.S.I.,' by Wilfrid Sparroy, with upwards of forty full-page illustrations reproduced from photographs. The book is a narrative of the author's life at the Court of H.I.H. Zillu's-Sultan, G.C.S.I., the eldest surviving son of Nasir-ud-din Shah, who would have succeeded to the Persian throne upon the assassination of his father, had his mother been of royal birth. He is the most vigorous Governor in Persia, and by far the most interesting and popular prince in that country.

We understand that his Majesty the King has graciously accepted a copy of the first part of 'Sporting Pictures' just published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

A new work from the pen of Mr. William Andrews, Librarian of the Hull Royal Institution Library, is promised for early publication under the title of 'A Book of Out-of-the-Way Knowledge,' and will deal with the more curious side of English social, domestic, and religious life of bygone times. The curious customs of the people will receive attention.

From the London County Council School of Photo-engraving and Lithography: Report for 1900-1901, compiled by the Principal, C. W. Gamble, and containing specimens of work done at the school. There is abundant evidence of the good work accomplished by the Bolt Court scholars, more particularly as the bulk of it is done by apprentices and assistants. The line and half-tone reproductions show considerable merit, as also the lithography in colours. We understand that no less than 136 firms are represented by employers in this school. Considering that nearly all the students are engaged in business during the day, and have but little free time to spare (after working and travelling hours are absorbed), the increasing attendance and quality of the work done must be greatly encouraging, not only to the Technical Board of the County Council but to the ratepayers who provide the necessary funds. It would be very encouraging for the future of this country if all branches of technical education could show such satisfactory results.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have recently received a bank-note for £100 to be handed to Mr. Newman Howard, the author of 'Keartan the Icelander: a Tragedy.' We are asked to state that the author is anxious to thank the unknown donor, and to communicate circumstances of interest; and to that end Messrs. Dent would be much obliged if the gentleman would send them his name and address.

Mr. G. W. E. Russell says of Mr. Fisher Unwin's 'First Novel Library,' 'The idea of giving the beginner a "look-in" strikes me as excellent.' The second volume of the series has just been published, the scene of which is mostly laid in Wales; it is entitled 'The Searchers,' and its author is a Scotch lady, Mrs. Margaretta Byrde.

To the 'Temple Classics' will shortly be added Kingsley's 'Westward Ho!' in two volumes, the first having a reproduction of W. S. Hunt's portrait of the author as frontispiece, and the second a view of Eversley Church and Rectory.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will issue next week the thirteenth thousand of 'The Grandmother's Advice to Elizabeth,' by the author of 'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.'

To meet the wants of travellers Mr. Unwin is publishing a specially handy edition of some volumes of his 'Story of the Nations' series. 'Venice,' by Alethea Wiel; 'Switzerland,' by Lina Hug and R. Stead; and 'Florence,' by Bella Duffy, will appear in this Tourist Edition on Monday. The volumes will be bound (after the fashion of Baedeker's Guides) in red cloth with rounded corners and marbled edges, and the price will be the same as that of the ordinary cloth edition.

On May 19 Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish a 'Life of Captain John Brown, of Harper's Ferry,' the anti-slavery hero whose name is familiar to most people from the lines:

John Brown's body lies a'mould'ring in the grave,
But his soul is marching on.

A stirring career was his, and a tragic death. On the night of October 16, 1859, he seized the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, at the head of a small band of followers, with a view to arming the negroes and inciting an insurrection. He was captured on October 18, was tried by the Commonwealth of Virginia, and was executed at Charlestown on December 2, 1859. Mr. John Newton, Brown's biographer, has been at pains to inform himself from every available source upon which it was possible to draw. The result is a most exhaustive work in which the part Brown took in the Kansas border wars, all his preparations for Harper's Ferry and what occurred there, and his trial are fully related. There are also interesting sketches of many prominent men of all parties with whom Brown came into contact.

There have already been some forty-eight editions of Blackmore's celebrated novel 'Lorna Doone'; the publishers, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., have now a second sixpenny edition in hand; some five years ago it was issued at sixpence, but the edition of one hundred and fifty thousand was exhausted in the course of two or three weeks.

The same firm are issuing also Lord Roberts's 'Rise of Wellington' as a sixpenny, specially dedicated to the British Army, this book having had a large circulation in the more elaborate form.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers announce 'Marion Manning,' by Edith Eustis, a novel of modern American life, with a strong political interest. Mrs. Eustis is the daughter of the Hon. Levi P. Morton, ex-Vice-President of the United States.

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Gill & Sons wish to notify that in future Messrs. Slater, Knott, & Bartlett will respectively represent them in London and Home Counties, North of England, and the Midlands, &c.

THE ISLAND OF MARTINIQUE AND TOWN OF ST. PIERRE.

The following description of the Island of Martinique and the picture of St. Pierre, owing to the awful calamity which has befallen it, may be found at present of interest to our readers. It is taken from Mr. Chas. H. Eden's work on 'The West Indies,' published in Sampson Low & Co.'s 'Foreign Countries and British Colonies' Series:—

'Martinique (or Martinico), the most northward of the Windward Islands, is situated between lat. 14° 23' and 14° 50' N., and long. 60° 50' and 61° 19' W., lying 30 miles south-east of Dominica, and 20 miles north of St. Lucia. It is 45 miles in length by 15 miles at its greatest breadth, with an area of 381 square miles, and a population of 153,334, of whom 20,000 are whites, and about 16,000 coolies.

productions being sugar, coffee, indigo, maize, cocoa, and ginger. The commerce of the island is chiefly with France, and great industrial energy has been exhibited by the inhabitants. Associations have of late years been formed for the promotion of agriculture, a school of arts and manufacture has come into existence, excellent machinery is employed in the preparation of indigo and other products, and potteries are supplying the wants of the population. The great drawback to the well-being of the island is its liability to earthquakes, hurricanes, cholera, yellow fever, and last, but far from least, terrible droughts.

'The government and the history of Martinique are almost identical with that of Guadeloupe, and need not be recapitulated. About nine miles distant from Fort de France, a small island rises abruptly from the sea, called the Diamond Rock. This the British took possession of, and kept a naval garrison

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

SIR,—May I revert to the letter of Mr. J. W. Harden in your issue of the 10th inst.? An instance was given of the sudden death of a young man, an assistant in the Row, where the widow was left with a baby only a few days old and another child unprovided for. Some friends exerted themselves, and collected, I am told, something like £60.

Had this man been a member of the B.P.I. there would have been no need for sending round the hat and the solicitation of individual charity. I have in mind an almost

ST. PIERRE, MARTINIQUE.

'Both the shape and the surface of Martinique are very irregular; numerous conical hills break the landscape, and in the interior are three mountains, generally cloud-capped, one of which, Mont Pelée, reaches a height of 4,438 feet above the level of the sea. These are all ancient volcanoes, and were supposed, after many years' quietude, to be extinct; but in 1851 Mont Pelée burst forth in full vigour, and did considerable damage. Between the spurs sent out by the main range are broad fertile valleys, watered by small rivers that in the rainy season become fierce torrents. The coast is broken up into numerous bays, which are difficult of entry.

'There are two towns, Fort de France and St. Pierre, of which the former, being the seat of government, is considered the capital, although St. Pierre far exceeds it in size and commercial importance. About one-third of the island is under cultivation, its principal on it during the whole of the war, the rock being rated by the Admiralty as a sloop of war.'

Some interesting information about St. Lucia, Martinique, and Dominica will also be found in 'A Glimpse of the Tropics, or Four Months' Cruising in the West Indies,' by Mr. E. A. Hastings Jay, F.R.G.S. Mr. Jay visited and describes many of the places which have been brought to public notice in such a terrible way during the last few days. He stayed at St. Pierre, and visited the boiling lake in Dominica, which is now giving rise to such anxiety; he says that 'he gazed at it in mingled horror and amazement. Awful as it was, its very ghastliness fascinated one.' Mr. Jay is of opinion that it is quite probable that the population of St. Vincent will be removed, and no attempt made to restore the fortunes of an island so subject to such calamity.

similar instance in which the man was a member of the Institution. When he died, after a long illness, a letter to the Secretary stating the circumstances was laid before the Directors, and a grant was made there and then, and as a matter of course. No canvassing for votes or interest of subscribers. No personal solicitation. One letter from the widow was sufficient to bring her the substantial help of which she was in need.

Charity in one sense of the word did not enter this case. The widow was in trouble and her husband was a member, therefore she had a perfect right to call upon the Institution.

Your monthly paragraph summarises the work thus: 'At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution the sum of one hundred pounds was voted for the relief of sixty members and widows of members.' That is about all that is said, but how much do these lines mean?

It may help to answer that question if we remember that two-thirds of these beneficiaries are widows of assistants.

Yours &c.,

JOHN COOPER,
Director, B.P.I.

AN ENQUIRY.

DEAR SIR,—Can you give me particulars (price, publisher &c.) of George Moore's 'Grania and Diarmid'? I can find nothing in your English Catalogue. I think the book was published about two years ago. Any information will oblige

Yours truly,

PRINTERS' PENSION CORPORATION.

In view of the recent correspondence in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR on the question of Provident Institutions the following report will be of interest to many of our readers as showing what is done in the printing trade:—

'On Tuesday the Master and Court of the Stationers' Company paid an official visit to the Printers' Almshouses, Wood Green. There were present: Mr. Alderman Truscott (the Master), Mr. Alderman Strong, Mr. J. W. Harrison, Mr. G. Mills, Mr. W. Rider, Mr. Richard Stevens, and Mr. Herbert J. Waterlow. The following members of the Council of the Corporation were present: Mr. W. H. Collingridge (trustee), Mr. F. J. E. Young (the chairman), Mr. J. F. Beck (the deputy chairman), Mr. C. J. Drummond, Mr. J. T. R. Gibbs, Mr. J. A. Harvey, Mr. R. J. Hearnden, Mr. W. Hilton, Mr. W. Vandy, and Mr. C. S. Yeates, with Dr. W. E. Porter (the medical officer), and Mr. Joseph Mortimer (the secretary). The visitors were welcomed in the board room by Mr. Collingridge, who explained the details of the work carried on for the benefit of aged printers and their widows. There were, he said, thirty-two homes, each of which was separate and complete in itself. A medical officer was provided, and a nurse was in residence, both of those officers being in thorough sympathy with the object of the council in brightening the lives of the inmates. As evidencing the care bestowed upon the aged people, it was worthy of note that four members of the Council comprised the Visiting Committee, whose duty it was to visit regularly, and report to the Council every month. That, he thought, was of special value, its importance to the inmates being great because of the sympathy the visits engendered. A religious service of a simple character was held every Sunday afternoon. Those services had been conducted at various times by ministers of nearly every denomination. The principle of self-help permeated the operations of the Corporation, and those aged printers who became the recipients of its benefits felt that, in some degree at least, they were receiving that for which they had made provision. Everything was done by the Council to cultivate that feeling, and to encourage the thought that life at the almshouses meant in every sense of the word "home." Together with the privilege of free residence the inmates received a small endowment, but its amount was insufficient. An effort had been made to place the provision for that endowment on a satisfactory footing. An appeal was made some years ago for a sum of £10,000, and in response a sum of £3,431 9s. 9d. had been contributed, while he (Mr. Collingridge) felt assured that the remainder would follow as its necessity became evident. Mr. Collingridge concluded by expressing the warm thanks of the Council to the Master and the members of the Court for their kindness in journeying to Wood Green to see for themselves what was being done to succour the aged printer and his widow.

'Mr. F. J. E. Young and Mr. J. F. Beck added a few words of welcome.

'Mr. Alderman Truscott, on behalf of the Court, expressed their indebtedness to the Council for affording them the opportunity of thus visiting the almshouses officially. They already knew much of the beneficent work carried on, and he was pleased to state that in every direction he had learned of the excellence of the management, and of the economy practised. From personal knowledge he could endorse this verdict, and he felt proud that the printing trade possessed such an admirable institution.

'The visitors then made a tour of the almshouses, calling at several of the homes. Amongst the inmates visited were several who were recipients of pensions from the Company. Before departing the Master and members of the Court expressed themselves greatly interested in all they had seen, especially noting the cheerfulness prevalent amongst the inmates.'—City Press.

A WARNING FROM CANADA ON THE COPYRIGHT QUESTION.

A Canadian correspondent not connected with the Book Trade writes:

'I always read with interest the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, but with particular interest read the March 22 copy containing the report of Mr. Macmillan's speech at the meeting of the Publishers' Association, and also a note with reference to the reception given by the President of the Board of Trade to the deputation on the subject of the Copyright Bill. I am afraid that Mr. Gilbert Parker is somewhat like the Englishman proverbial in Canada. He goes across the country in an express train, and then goes home to England and writes a book. If Mr. Gilbert Parker is sanguine that so far as Canada is concerned there are now no great difficulties in the way of passing the Copyright Bill, he could not have taken much pains to inform himself. There never was at any time stronger agitation to secure the entire abolition of the British Copyright Acts in so far as they affect Canada. The Toronto Board of Trade has taken this question up, and has issued a circular to all the other Boards of Trade in Canada, and some Boards of Trade have joined in urging the Canadian Government to adopt such a policy. Recently a large deputation representing the Toronto Board of Trade, and claiming also to represent publishers, binders, and other kindred trades, waited upon the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa to urge legislation which would result in copyright protection being given to authors in Canada only when the books were produced here.

The Typographical Union of Toronto has lent its aid to the pressure, and so has the Association of Master Printers and Binders. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association was also urged to take the matter up, but has decided to take no action for another year. These are all important bodies, and the only voice heard in Canada in favour of the British author is Mr. Morang's. The Canadian Society of Authors are doing what they can, of course, but naturally approach the point from their own point of view.

I enclose you some clippings from our newspapers here which will enlighten you as to what is going on. They will also indicate to you that the British authors should be on their guard in respect of their own rights.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN FICTION IN GERMANY.

Robert Lutz, the Stuttgart publisher, has been endeavouring to make his fellow-countrymen acquainted with the best English and American fiction through translations. His efforts have not met with the desired response, and he sends to the Börsenblatt an account of his keen disappointment, which is translated by the Living Age as follows:

'A translation of Barrie's "Window in Thrums" in two years reached a sale of 202 copies. Blackmore's "Lorna Doone" in seven years has sold 825 copies. Miss Corelli's "Romance of Two Worlds" in the same time has sold 688 copies. Crawford's "A Cigarette Maker's Romance" in eight years has sold 513 copies. Miss Wilkins's "Short Stories" have sold 417 copies in eight years; Miss Howard's "Guenn," 967 in twelve years; and Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," 507 in four years. The price of these books, well bound in cloth, averages from two to three marks (fifty to seventy-five cents). On two only of the books has the luckless publisher got his money back.'—Publishers' Weekly.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The Committee of Management of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution desire to thank Messrs. George Dott, Robert More, and John Stevenson for the valuable time, trouble, and personal expense recently incurred by them in bringing the objects of this Institution to the notice of the Scottish news trade.

Hotel, Charing Cross, Glasgow, on Tuesday, April 29, was organised by these gentlemen in consequence of an invitation addressed to them by Lord Monkswell, and their excellent efforts may be regarded as indirectly resulting from the recent addition of several provincial members to the Committee.

From the remarks made at the banquet and from the number of life and annual members then and since enrolled, it is very evident how thoroughly and earnestly these gentlemen have interested their fellow citizens in the work of the Newsvendors' Institution.

That publishers, wholesalers, and retailers were represented at this meeting, and all evinced great interest in its objects, rejoices the Committee, proving that the scope of the Institution's work is understood and maintained as intended by its founders.

AN EMPIRE-WIDE COMPETITION.

In November last the publishers of Good Words announced that they would give £75 in cash prizes for the three best Coronation Odes submitted to them before a given date. Publicity was given to the announcement in all parts of the British Empire, and the poets of the whole Empire—inasmuch as the Coronation was a theme which ought to appeal equally to British subjects all over the globe—were invited to compete. The number of individual competitions received is 1,047. Scarcely any part of the British Empire, even down to the smallest island in the most remote seas, is unrepresented.

The odes are already in the hands of preliminary committees, being sifted down till the surviving fittest are reserved for the final judges. The award will be announced and the winning odes published in the Coronation number of Good Words, which will be issued about June 20.

MR. HAZLITT'S 'MONTAIGNE.'

An entirely new edition of the text of 'Montaigne's Essays and Letters' (founded on the now extremely scarce one published in 1877 in three volumes octavo) has now been brought to completion (Publishers, Messrs. Reeves & Turner), and will, partly by reason of enlarged introductory matter, and partly by additional notes, extend to four volumes. The edition of 1877 was superintended by Mr. Hazlitt's father, though bearing his own name on the title, and he merely contributed the Preface. The book has now at length been adapted to the last French Variorum as far as possible, and innumerable errors of the former English versions have been rectified. The biographical account of the essayist has been considerably amplified, and instead of the sixteen Letters given in 1877 there are thirty-five, many of which are of interest and importance towards understanding the life of the author. A salient feature in the present undertaking is to have substituted for the English colloquial equivalents, or rather supposed equivalents, of the great Frenchman's language, the words which he actually uses, or the sense which he actually intends to convey; and the difference is often curious and sometimes great between him and his English renderers.

EDITORIAL CARELESSNESS.

'Yes,' said the editor, as he put his gum brush into the ink bottle and tried to paste on a clipping with his pen—'yes, the great fault of newspaper contributors is carelessness. Indeed,' he continued, as he dropped the copy he had been writing into the waste paper basket and marked 'Editorial' across the corner of a poem entitled 'An Ode to Death,' 'contributors are terribly careless. You would be surprised,' said he, as he clipped out a column of fashion notes and labeled them 'Announcements,' 'to see the slipshod writing that comes into the editorial sanctum. Misspelled, unpunctuated, written on both sides of the sheet, illegible, ungrammatical stuff. Contributors are terribly careless. They are——' Just then the office boy came in that dictatorial and autocratic manner he has, and demanded more copy, and the editor handed him the love-letter he had just written to his sweetheart.—American Stationer.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Living Rulers of Mankind,' by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson, R.A., F.G.S. Vol. I. We have before expressed our admiration of this attractive, well written serial, when noticing the first number. Volume one, with its profusion of beautiful illustrations, interesting matter, and elegant pictorial binding, serves to confirm our earlier impressions. Of its kind we know of no more artistically produced work. The portraits alone—if we except the coloured plates, which are not quite a success—constitute an extremely fascinating feature, and in variety of illustration the volume is especially well served. The countries treated of are Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, China, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, and Italy.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The Old Senate and the New Monarchy: 60 B.C. to A.D. 14,' by F. M. Ormiston. This is the third and concluding volume of the series of 'Historical Latin Readers' projected by Messrs. Black. The first, containing extracts from Latin authors descriptive of 'The Conquest of Italy and the Struggle with Carthage, 753-200 B.C.,' was compiled by Mr. E. G. Wilkinson; the second, devoted to 'The Foreign Empire, 200-60 B.C.,' received treatment at the hands of Mr. H. W. Atkinson; and the third, now before us, completes the publication. It will thus be seen that the series in its entirety constitutes a complete history of Rome. There are many features in the preparation of these little volumes that render them particularly useful for school purposes. The Latin passages have been so arranged that they present an ascending scale of difficulty, not only between the volumes, but in the actual volumes themselves. The introductory notes which preface each passage have been drawn out with a keen eye to securing the interest of the pupil, and frequent reference is made to parallel events in the history of other nations. With regard to Miss Ormiston's volume, it need only be said that it ably carries out the general scheme of the series, and bears convincing evidence of the great care she has bestowed upon its preparation. The Notes are specially worthy of commendation, being admirably concise and to the purpose, while the Vocabulary will be found fully adapted to the requirements of the scholar.

From the same.—'Shall we Understand the Bible?' by Rev. J. Rhondda Williams, revised and enlarged edition. This book demands notice as being not merely a reprint, but an enlarged and revised edition of an important work by an able Nonconformist minister, who delivered the five lectures comprised in the first edition at the request of a committee appointed to initiate a forward movement in Sunday-school teaching at Bradford. The subjects of these lectures were: 'What the Historical Interpretation of the Bible is and the Need of it'; 'Different Conceptions of God in the Bible'; 'Different Conceptions of Providence in the Bible'; 'Conceptions of a Future Life in the Bible'; and 'The Idea of a Devil.' A sixth lecture finds place in this edition on 'The Enhanced Value of the Bible through Historical Interpretation.' In a prefatory note the author states that 'his hope is that these lectures will stimulate interest in this most precious library of the world, and create an appetite in his readers that will take them to the works of scholarly men who give their whole life to its investigation.' Had a list of such works been given this hope were better warranted. However this may be, and without accepting all the lecturer's opinions, there can be no doubt that Mr. Rhondda Williams has written a thoughtful and scholarly book which claims and repays perusal.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'A Mystery of St. Rule's,' by Ethel F. Heddle. A clever, bright story of Scotch life. 'St. Rule's' is a thin disguise for St. Andrews, and one of Miss Heddle's most successful characters might well be mistaken for a portrait of Mr. Lang. The theft of a diamond and its recovery; love with misunderstanding and reconciliation; skilful dialogue with genuine touches of humour;—these make up a very readable tale which ends, as all pleasant tales should, with a marriage—or, at all events, the promise of one. We notice a very distinct advance in Miss Heddle's art, and congratulate her on a book which will bear comparison with many of the most successful novels of the day.

From Messrs. S. H. Bousfield & Co. Ltd.—'Epaulettes' (Service Types), by Torin Blair, with illustrations by Frank Reynolds. The author of this volume has some good tales to tell of the service, and knows how to tell them. The opening story, called 'Aw-Yees,' has for its hero an officer who was set down as an ass by his brother subalterns because of his drooping yellow moustache, eyeglass, and hesitating 'Haw-damme' manner assumed to assist in mastering an abnormal nervousness; added to which were a lisp and five names ending in Snythe. Being extremely sensitive he becomes the butt of the mess, and one day his furniture is destroyed and his rooms turned inside out. But he takes every such incident in good part, and after a time gets his company. Then he is ordered to South Africa, and we are told how the once despised subaltern gallantly wins the V.C. 'Seconded' tells of a convoy captured for want of scouting, because the officer in command, who had been ten years in the army and was brave as a lion, belonged to a crack corps, and was too useful at social functions to go near his regiment, and, when at the front, would not take advice. 'The Eternal Feminine' shows how an incompetent General, who loses his head, and also valuable lives and many guns, muddles through a court of inquiry and gets an important command at home, thanks to his lady friends. 'Our Military Expert' is the story of a fine strategist—on paper—who, being sent to India and entrusted with a brigade, so managed matters as to have two regiments decimated. Being acquitted by a court of inquiry he retired. Some of the sketches called 'Casualties' are very touching.

From Mr. F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig.—'Internationaler Verleger Kongress. Bericht über die Vierte Tagung, 10 bis 13 Juni, 1901, zu Leipzig.' We welcome this Report of the very successful Fourth Session of the International Congress of Publishers, held at Leipzig last June, so sumptuously printed by the well-known firm of F. A. Brockhaus, by which firm it is also published in the stately volume before us; in itself a worthy record of the useful work of the Congress, which, had it done nothing more than found the Permanent Bureau at Berne, would have deserved the grateful recognition of all interested in protecting copyright throughout the world. While commending the get-up of the volume, we must not forget to draw attention to the admirable translations into German of the speeches delivered by foreign delegates. They read as if German were the language of the respective orators. A pleasant conclusion suggests itself on reperusing these speeches, and that is, that while the three previous sessions were characterised by the friendliness of those taking part in them, at none did more cordiality and unanimity reign than at this, in all respects satisfactory, Fourth Session at Leipzig.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'From Cradle to School,' by Mrs. Ada S. Ballin. Mrs. Ballin is the editress of Baby: The Mothers' Magazine, and in that capacity she has had fifteen years' experience in advising mothers and nurses. In the face of this fact, we should be afraid of criticising her book; but, indeed, there is no occasion to find fault with it, as it seems to us full of commonsense and well-seasoned advice. She has chapters devoted to the nursery, infant feeding, exercise, teething, infectious diseases, early training, and so on, and though much of what she says may seem to some readers merely obvious platitude, this is not really so, as such advice is necessary for the many women who have not the least power to think where their children are concerned. We do not agree with one little point raised by the authoress: what she says on books for children is very sensible, but we cannot concur with her in advising mothers and nurses to read classical authors to the children in their care, taking care to modify the plot whenever it becomes sad or tragic. Children have very tenacious memories with regard to what appeals to their imaginations, and to change the plot of one of Scott's novels, for instance, would be to bring them up in wilful ignorance. A better plan would be to select only those tales which are from beginning to end suitable for young minds.

From the same.—'Elma Trevor,' by Florence Darnley and Randolph Ll. Hodgson. The old, old story that never seems to lose any of its attractiveness through age. An irritable selfish husband, a sensitive, loving wife, and a handsome, sympathising friend who by his ingratiating ways possesses himself of the wife's heart almost before she is aware of her loss—how often have these characters played their little parts on life's stage, and yet how fraught with interest their actions are still! But Elma Trevor, in the present instance, is no weak sentimental woman, oblivious to the calls of duty. For a long time she nobly strives to win her husband to a better course of conduct, and it is only when she has been brutally repulsed over and over again, and her best feelings have been ruthlessly trampled on, that she allows her heart to go out to Ashley Sterne. Something of a novelty is introduced into the old outline of the plot by the fact that the husband loses his eyesight, and when thus rendered helpless first realises the innate goodness of his wife's disposition. Meanwhile Sterne has been banished by her decree to far distant lands, and is only recalled by the intelligence of Arthur Trevor's death. In this novel we have another instance of how difficult it apparently is for a woman writer to depict a thoroughly satisfactory hero. Ashley Sterne's attractiveness seemingly consists in an extremely handsome person and a remarkably sympathetic and manly disposition. For the rest he talks in a stiff, 'booky' fashion that few people, we fancy, in actual life would be found to put up with, and for a man who has successfully defied the blandishments of the fair sex for so many years falls an exceedingly easy prey to his 'fate' when she appears. Elma Trevor is much more interesting, and the authors have drawn a very absorbing picture of the beautiful sweet-natured woman struggling against the restraints forced upon her by a narrow-minded selfish husband. The story, if not exactly powerful, in many respects successfully probes the motives of human action, and will from its romantic colouring have a charm for the majority of fiction readers.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Last Words,' by Stephen Crane. In these short, perfectly chiselled tales of America, England, and Ireland, we have Mr. Crane almost at his very best; the 'London Impressions,' in particular, strike us as being exceptionally clever and well observed. His writing is direct, pungent, and witty; with a phrase he creates his image, and places it before your eyes never to be forgotten. From the title of the book it would seem that this is the last volume we are to have from the material which the brilliant writer left behind him on his death a year or two ago; this being so, there is a pathetic interest attaching to the volume, which will attract those who admire strong and original work.

From the same.—'The Woman he Chose,' a novel, by R. M. Kennedy. It is refreshing to take up such a well planned and crisply written story as this. 'He' is Sir Edmund Mowbray, of Stoke Merling, a bachelor of 34, who had succeeded his father as a boy of eight, when his sister Marjorie was still only a baby. Lady Muriel Mowbray afterwards became the wife of Colonel Neville, and had two more children, Fay and Jack. Lady Muriel has a nephew and niece; the former, James Mowbray, is a scapegrace who had been packed off to India, from whence it was devoutly wished he would never return; the latter, Dora, had married Sir Edmund's greatest friend, Captain Cholmondeley, because, as some people said, she could not have Sir Edmund, who seemed a confirmed bachelor. Everyone said Edmund ought to marry except Marjorie, who is so fond of her brother that she cannot bear the idea of being superseded by a sister-in-law. Mrs. Cholmondeley is particularly anxious to see the Baronet married; although, if Sir Edmund were to die unmarried, her brother James would succeed to the baronetcy and estates. However, she is much annoyed when Sir Edmund proposes to the beautiful but blind girl, Cecil Garestone, who accepts him, but with misgiving, because she fears her blindness may unfit her for the position she ought to take in Society. However, they are married, but not until an anonymous letter addressed to Cecil asking her to withdraw her acceptance of Edmund's offer and some family growls forebode troubles to come. And come they do, sure enough; but we are not about to forestall anyone's pleasure in the reading of this capital novel by saying more about it except that the denouement is eminently satisfactory.

From Messrs. Gale & Poulton, Ltd.—'Company Training Made Easy,' by Captain H. C. Evans. It is not difficult, even without exact technical knowledge, to see how useful such a work as this must be in the training of volunteers. The book is arranged in the form of lectures, each taking up some important branch of the service, and the idea is that the captain of a company should deliver this to his men before putting them through the work practically in the field. At the end of every lecture are a number of questions which will serve to fix the facts in the men's minds. Some of the instructions, perhaps, seem a little simple, but it must be remembered that the rank and file of the army is composed of men of various degrees of intellect.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd.—'The God of his Fathers,' by Jack London. We do not wish to be patronising when we say, with emphatic conviction, that Mr. London has a future before him. He has power of so rugged a nature, flashes of insight of so startling a character, and pathos so elevated in tone that he compels instant recognition at the hands of all careful readers. Not that he is without faults; far from it, but they are the faults of inexperience. The eleven short tales that constitute this volume have the Klondyke for their mise-en-scène, and the author evidently knows his ground thoroughly. We feel constrained to enter our protest against the custom of publishing a book of short tales under one title, without any indication that the work is not one continued story.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Court of Destiny,' by G. G. Chatterton. This novel unfortunately suffers from what would chill the sympathies of most readers—a peculiarly aggravating hero. Godfrey Eccles, the gentleman in question, who holds a commission in his Majesty's army, falls in love with a young lady of good family but moderate means. He does not exactly confess his attachment—that is to say, there are no passionate love scenes—but an agreement is tacitly entered into between them that they shall wait for each other until such time as he shall be in a position financially to ask her to be his wife. It is an engagement and yet not an engagement, each party being in a position at any time to cry off should more suitable metal present itself. No wonder that Miss Pendrell, Eva's aunt, strongly objects to this arrangement, but she is ultimately persuaded over. Six years pass away, and matters are no further advanced. Godfrey is full of self-reproaches, but apparently does little to relieve the situation. If he would only sometimes allow his feelings to get the better of him, we are quite sure the majority of readers would be glad, but he is a model of self-restraint. Meanwhile, the girl is pining her heart away. Then Godfrey's regiment is ordered to Jamaica, and thither also, after a few months, the heroine proceeds, animated by a desire to see her lukewarm lover again. Arrived there, she finds him flirting with another girl several years younger than herself—indeed, Eva is now thirty. Nothing, however, comes of this, though for a time it imparts a little deeper interest to the story, and Godfrey's cousin dying and leaving him all his property places this anything but ardent son of Mars in a position to marry, which he does, and the lovers are presumably happy. The story is lightly and agreeably told, and in this its chief attraction consists.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'How to Bring Up your Children: being Some Thoughts on Education,' by John Locke (the great philosopher). In turning over the pages of this little treatise it is impossible not to be struck by the extremely practical character of the proffered advice, which is just as much to the purpose at the present day as it was over two hundred years ago, when the work first saw the light. Indeed in some respects it may be said to be more so, for many of the errors in education to which Locke refers have increased with time and are now infinitely more pronounced than they were. Take, for instance, the question of dress. Locke declaims against the covering of a child's body being made cause for vanity and emulation. Many of the children one meets nowadays are so fancifully and expensively attired that they are more like dainty fairies than creatures of real flesh and blood. Such pandering to the worldly side of life can scarcely fail to make an impression on the child's mind, and sow the seeds of vanity and selfishness. Naturally in many ways Locke's warnings will seem old-fashioned, but it is in respect rather of their phraseology than in the actual truths they seek to convey. The right attitude of parents towards their children in matters of discipline, example, and guidance, must ever fundamentally remain the same, and the opinions of our forefathers are not to be scoffed at because they happen to be expressed in somewhat ponderous language. Very often they knew a great deal more than we do. Every parent, we make bold to say, would be the better for reading this little volume and committing its lessons to heart.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'Macmillan's New Geography Readers: Africa and Australia.' No two countries, we imagine, in their natural features could be more interesting to the juvenile mind than Africa and Australia, and the compilers of this excellent little work have striven not only to bring out all this attractiveness in the text, but have further added to it by numerous striking illustrations. Every detail of the book has evidently been carefully attended to, and the result is a school manual that it would be difficult to improve upon.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Works of Shakespeare. "The Tempest,"' edited by Morton Luce. 'The Tempest' and 'Love's Labour's Lost' being the only plays of Shakespeare the origins of which are yet undiscovered, Mr. Morton Luce devotes Part I. of his interesting and valuable Introduction to an inquiry into the sources of the first named play. Part II. contains evidence on the much disputed point of the date of the play, which, although occupying the first place in the edition of Shakespeare's plays published by his fellow players, Heminge and Condell, in 1623, and in almost every later edition, Mr. Luce shows good cause for considering as one of the latest, if not the very last, of its author's plays, and suggests the end of 1610 or the beginning of 1611 as the probable date of its completion. Part III. deals with the characteristics of the play as a work of art, as a criticism of life, and as an autobiography of its creator. The text of the play is copiously, but judiciously, annotated; and four appendices are given, containing illustrations of the play, names of the actors, notes on Ariel's songs, and other matters of interest.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Godly Union and Concord,' by H. Hensley Henson, B.D. Canon Henson's sermons, unlike the sermons of most divines, read as well as they sounded when first delivered from the pulpit. They are compact, closely knit, and eminently thoughtful, and merely as pieces of literature they have considerable value. In a somewhat lengthy Introduction Canon Henson discusses among other things Dr. Moberly's 'Ministerial Priesthood,' and the pages devoted to this subject are among the best in the volume. The sermons themselves were preached in Westminster Abbey and in St. Margaret's, Westminster, during last year, and are broad in tone and scholarly in feeling. As a contribution to that movement which is working in the interest of Christian fraternity, the book is well nigh invaluable, and no present-day student of religious problems can afford to ignore it.

From Messrs. James Nisbet & Co., Ltd.—'A Faithful Sower.' A Memoir of the Life of the Rev. George Everard, M.A., edited by his Daughter, with a Preface by the Bishop of Durham. Richard Everard, George's father, was of Norman ancestry; one of the family was created a peer, and another was that Bishop of Norwich who built the nave of the cathedral. Richard himself was a linen manufacturer who had his factory at York, but resided at Spalding in Lincolnshire, where the subject of this Memoir was born, June 4, 1828. On one of his journeys between Spalding and York, in 1829, Richard Everard caught cold and died at Newark. Mrs. Everard removed with her family, in 1840, to Manchester; in February 1841 George entered Manchester Grammar School, and in 1843 he had the misfortune to lose his mother. Two years later he was clerk in a Manchester warehouse, when an event happened which decided his future career. Bereft of father and mother, and without a guardian to look after him, he took to gaming. In the first and seventh chapters we are told, in his own words, how he was rescued from this terrible propensity. We are also told how he gave up newspaper reading; and how, after office hours, which were from 8.30 A.M. to 7.30 P.M., he set to work, aided by a tutor, to prepare for the University, with the result that soon after entering St. John's College, Cambridge, he obtained a scholarship, which he held during his four years' residence. Of his college career we read that he began well, and went on to the end as he began; thus verifying the adage, 'Well begun is half done.' In May 1852 he was ordained deacon by Archbishop Sumner to a curacy at Christ's Church, Ramsgate, under the Rev. Edward Hoare. From this time he never faltered or looked back, but pressed diligently forward as a hard-working Evangelical clergyman, one thoroughly charitable and brotherly in all things. 'His plan of combating error was "speaking the truth in love."' This is a good and helpful book.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'The Ruin of Education in Ireland and the Irish Fanar,' by F. Hugh O'Donnell, M.A. This volume is issued partly by way of protest. The author was particularly anxious to give evidence before the University Commission on Education in Ireland, and his applications to this end were repeatedly disregarded. He now, therefore, publishes an outline of the statements he would have made, in which he may certainly be credited with the courage of his opinions. In these he treats of Catholic finance and Catholic education, the spurious character of clerico-educational petitions, the clerical boycott of lay learning, the hunt for fees and the ruin of scholars, the despotism over the National schoolmasters, the position of Catholic students at Oxford and Cambridge, and other phases of the subject. Of the outspoken character of his work sufficient idea may be gathered from the following quotation taken from the introduction: 'The Catholic laity of Ireland pay millions, and neither Vestry Boards of laymen nor Diocesan Boards of laymen, nor National Congresses of laymen, are allowed to ask what becomes of it all. The treasury of the Church in Ireland is guarded more jealously from lay investigation than it used to be from the irreverent and acquisitive soldiery of Munro and Cromwell!'

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'Miss Carmichael's Conscience,' by the Baroness von Hutton. There is much delicate art used in this little book. Miss Carmichael is a flirt with whom we ourselves have fallen deeply in love. Being vain, the admiration of the male sex is an absolute necessity; being independent, their love is a nuisance; and being superficial, she does not see the error of her ways until she herself is made to suffer. We do not quite agree with the authoress in thinking her heroine so heartless; men are not so easily entrapped as she imagines.

From 'Revue Biblio-Iconographique,' Paris. We have received the Nos. 2, 3, 4 (February, March, and April, 1902) of this periodical, so interesting and valuable to all book-lovers. February number contains articles on the sale of the library of M. Eugène Paillet, Président de la Société des Amis des Livres; on Les premiers Charpentier, in which is an account of a French translation of Lingard's 'History of England,' one of the largest and most unfortunate of Charpentier's publications; 'Une Vente d'Autographes,' among which is mentioned the famous examination of Sophie, wife of Camille Desmoulins, which preceded her condemnation under the Terror. It is very short. Question—'If she had ever plotted against the Republic?' Answer—'Never.' Whereupon Fouquier-Tinville sent her to the scaffold. They had no time to spare in 1793. The continuation of 'Petites Misères de la Vie d'Ecrivain,' relates some impudent cases of reproducing old books with new titles. March number has articles on Victor Hugo, in which we find the agreements between the poet and the publisher, J.-B. Tarride, for the publication of 'Napoléon le Petit' and Hugo's 'Œuvres Oratoires complètes'; La correspondance secrète de Mirabeau et de Sophie de Monnier; Les Autographes de la Bibliothèque Philippe Gilles, among which are quotations from letters of Émile Zola on his novels 'La Débâcle' and 'Docteur Pascal.' April number has more about 'La Vente Paillet'; a projected journey of Dumas père around the Mediterranean, which was not completed, as the novelist was twice arrested in Naples and the Papal States and obliged to return to France; a note on a portrait of Louis XI.; on the sale at Chicago of first editions of Rudyard Kipling; and notices of new books.

From Mr. James Robinson, Bridge Street, Manchester.—'Discourses on the Epistle of Paul to the Philippians,' by Rev. Frederick A. Noble, D.D. There is considerable originality of style for English readers in these Chicago sermons, but apart from this they call for brief notice. The author exhibits the usual directness of treatment observable in the work of American divines, and his words are calculated to leave a deep impression on the religious mind.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The National Sporting Club, Past and Present,' by A. F. Bettinson and W. Outram Tristram. The purpose of this volume, we are told in the introductory pages, is to treat of boxing and kindred sports from the standpoint of the National Sporting Club—in other words, we presume, to give an account of the many fistic encounters that have taken place in this temple of the pugilist. The past is soon disposed of; the history of the club-house from 1664 to 1856 occupies some sixteen pages of a book that contains over two hundred in all. Brief mention is made of the early days of Covent Garden and the former inhabitants of the premises now occupied by the Club; we hear of Sir Kenelm Digby, Admiral Russell, the hotel proprietor David Low, and of course Evans's Supper Rooms, but every endeavour is made to avoid loitering on the way, and to get to the 'osses. From 1891 onwards we have a detailed chronicle of the numerous 'shows' given in the Club Theatre, commencing with the encounter between W. Reader and William Baxter, and ending with Harris's remarkable victory over Pedlar Palmer in March of last year. Following this is a further section devoted to 'Other Weighty Club Matters,' in which questions of law largely predominate. Under this heading, too, Mr. A. F. Bettinson contributes 'A Short Talk on the Decline of English Champions, with a Recipe for their Revival.' The volume is profusely illustrated, portraits being chiefly in evidence. Everyone of importance connected with the Club and many of the more prominent pugilists are thus represented. Their faces afford subject for study. In many respects the volume calls for warm praise, but one grows a little weary before the end is reached of the crude description of boxing contests, with the mere tabulation of names, and it would have been better, we think, if the services of a more experienced littérateur could have been employed, who would have imparted to the volume a little more of the interest that arises from a polished style and the adroit preparation of material.

From Messrs. Shaw & Sons and Messrs. Butterworth & Co.—'The Factory Acts,' by the late Alexander Redgrave, C.B., edited by H. S. Scrivener, M.A., and C. F. Lloyd. The eighth edition of this invaluable book contains 'the decisions of the courts of Scotland, some of which are of considerable importance,' and a comparative Table of References has been added 'showing at a glance what portion of the Act of 1901 corresponds to any given section of the older Acts.' The work is capably edited, the index alone consisting of over fifty pages of small type.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Lyre and Lancet,' by F. Anstey. We cordially welcome a second edition of this clever 'story in scenes.' It is reprinted from the columns of Punch, and the author's name is quite sufficient guarantee of a wide sale.

From Messrs. Smithers, Hampden & Co. 14 Clifford's Inn, W.C.—'The Sufferings of the Royal Family during the Revolution in France.' We doubt whether the importance of this work—first published on this side of the Channel in 1817—altogether justifies its reprint in the present high-priced edition; but of this the publishers, of course, may be supposed to be the best judges. It certainly places the character of Louis XVI. in a very favourable light, and shows with some degree of pathos the indignities to which the Royal Family were subjected during the turbulent events of 1793. Several additions are made to the present issue. The most interesting is a letter reprinted from the Times of November 8, 1793, describing the execution of Queen Marie Antoinette. The volume contains a photogravure frontispiece of King Louis XVI. taking leave of his family in the Temple, and an engraving of the tower of the Temple.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'Popular Stories, Vol. XI.: The Rajah's Gift; or, Trust and Fear not,' by A. J. Foxwell. Not a few visitors to the seaside would gladly answer 'yes' to some boatman's inquiry: 'Want a sail, sir?' if they felt sure of such consequences resulting from the sea trip as happened in the case of Frank Wilmot, the hero of this story. Frank was an orphan; and an aunt, who had paid for his education out of a small annuity, died before he was in receipt of a salary sufficient for his support. Then his master was removed by death after a short illness, the shop was pulled down, Frank lost his situation, and had come to this seaside resort in search of another, but without success. So, when asked by Jim Tarbutt, an old sailor, if he would like a sail, he replied that he could not afford the expense of such a luxury. 'Expense? Bless my heart, there's no expense; I'm asking for the pleasure of your company. I don't let out my boat—but excuse me, sir, I think a whiff of thesea will do you good . . .' Frank gratefully accepted old Jim's kindly offer, got into the boat, took the tiller; but, in tacking, pulled the tiller the wrong way, nearly upsetting the boat, and was knocked overboard. His life was saved by old Jim, who afterwards is instrumental in getting him into a situation; and, when on his death-bed, leaves him the Rajah's Gift. We are not about to say what the gift is, nor shall we divulge the plot of this exceedingly interesting and well-told story, which we unhesitatingly recommend to all who are not afraid of being amused by a tale with a religious tendency.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co. Ltd.—'The Run of the Season,' written and illustrated by Finch Mason. The author gives an amusing description, both by pen and pencil, of the characters frequenting the gathering of the 'Vale of Buttercupshire' hounds, the features of the run, and so forth. He has a quick eye for the humour of a situation, but not always the necessary skill wherewith to depict it. Many of the illustrations, though rough, are distinctly clever; others seem to lack suggestive force. But, on the whole, we like them better than the letterpress.

From the same.—'A True Sportsman,' by Francis Dodswoth. Dick Wright had bought bad horses, had sent them to bad trainers, and had backed them on the advice of interested friends, with the not unnatural result that he is 'broke.' His father, Sir John Wright, K.C.B., invites him to his club that they may discuss matters with a view to a settlement. In answer to Sir John's inquiry if he intends going abroad, he replies that he has no intention of leaving England, and shall stay in London until Goodwood; that he expects no help from anybody; and, when asked what profession he proposes to follow, answers: 'I shall be a professional backer.' Whereupon Sir John loses all control over himself; and, on looking round and seeing three of his friends, presents to them his son as a professional backer, and dismisses Dick with a nod. In settling with his creditors Dick is only partly successful, and one of them, a Jew named Ickton, will not wait for his money, but threatens to post him. As good luck would have it, a friend in need appears on the scene in the person of one Wilkins, whom Iekton had swindled and whose sister he had eloped with. This man helps to turn the tables on his and Dick's relentless foe. Before this happens, however, Dick has to pass through a season of dire distress, and the account of his walk to Epsom, and the attack on him when asleep by four footpads, is well told. How he escapes through Wilkins's active intervention, and ultimately more than retrieves his former position, must be read in this skilfully-told tale, which is full of movement and incident.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'A Girl of the Multitude,' by the author of 'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.' More substantial reputation is likely to be gained by this novel than from any number of smart society letters. The author has expanded to excellent purpose the incomplete impression derived of Eglée, 'the girl of the multitude,' from the memoirs of the Comte de Beugnot, and has drawn on the canvas of her book as picturesque a figure as could well be imagined. Poor Eglée, in the depth of her ignorance, her almost savage-like admiration for fine people and fine dresses, and the good attributes which may be said to be the outcome of her uncultivated mind, is a most engrossing personality throughout. The scene of the story is laid in Paris, and the period is that of the French Revolution. Eglée's interests are from a very early age enlisted with the aristocrats, and though surrounded in the Faubourg St. Antoine by the very scum of the populace, who are revolutionist to the backbone, she retains all her old beliefs. What direful situations result amid these troublous times are very effectively depicted in the story, and nothing can be more pathetic than the final picture of the unfortunate Eglée, after her brief experience of real love and self-sacrifice, being led away between guards to a solitary cell, 'to the very obliteration of all further trace of her.' From the material at command the author has evolved a highly absorbing story, which may, perhaps, in some respects startle the fastidious, but can only have genuine interest for the student of character.

From the same.—'The Grandmother's Advice to Elizabeth,' by the author of 'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.' It is possible to spoil a good idea by constant repetition, but this little book well maintains the interest aroused by previous epistolary communications addressed by Elizabeth's worldly connections to their relative. But it is difficult to be uniformly smart through some hundred and fifty pages, and occasionally there are dangerous relapses. When Elizabeth reaches old age herself, supposing she has been influenced by all the advice tendered to her, she should be a rather objectionable, worldly-wise character. Of the grandmother's counsel the following must serve as a sample: 'If Valmont has no objection to your speaking at the Bermondsey Town Hall to the Costermongers' Fine Art Society on the Second Period of Praxiteles, I suppose I can do nothing more than express astonishment. If you must slum, to see what it is like, you have chosen the best way. The only inconvenience will be to have to eat your dinner at six instead of eight, and, as you will remember, the costers are in the habit of going to the public-houses before going to bed, it would be as wise to depend upon the virtue of brevity for creating the due appreciation of your remarks.'

NEW EDITIONS.—We have received from Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. several additional volumes in their neat, well-printed pocket edition of George Meredith's works. These are: 'One of our Conquerors,' 'Evan Harrington,' 'Lord Ormont and his Aminta,' 'Vittoria,' 'The Amazing Marriage,' and 'The Adventures of Harry Richmond.' For readers whose means will not run to a library edition, we can heartily recommend this issue. Its handy size, large type, and thin paper are recommendations that will ensure its approval by the most exacting of critics.—Mr. Upcott Gill has published a third edition, revised and enlarged, of his manual on 'Ferrets and Ferretting,' a work which affords valuable information on the breeding, management, training, and working of ferrets, and the authors of which number, among others, Mr. W. Carnegie, Mr. Arthur Niblett, Mr. Leo Parsey, Mr. Lascelles Carr, and the Editor of the Bazaar.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

BOOKS WANTED

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns, and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

Publishers' Circular

Coronation Number MAY 31

We intend that as far as possible this Number shall be devoted to Coronation literary news and items of interest, but more especially to the Reviews of those Books which we anticipate will be in great demand during this festive season.

Special Art Paper has been selected, and an entirely new cover will be used, printed in coloured ink.

TWO THOUSAND extra copies of this Number will be printed and posted to the chief Libraries and Literary Institutions at home and in the Colonies.

We venture to think, therefore, that this Number will appeal to you as an Advertisement medium of unusual value, and your order should be placed without delay.

The Editor will be glad if you will send him for review any Books which may be suitable, and he may possibly be able to select illustrations for reproduction in this Number.

TOMMY ATKINS TELLS HOW IT FEELS TO BE IN BATTLE.*

Mr. James Milne has had the original and happy thought of collecting from all sources the letters of Tommy Atkins to his people at home; and in this volume he has selected portions which he has arranged in Twelve Chapters under the following headings: I. Arms and the Man; II. What Campaigning Means; III. Battle in Being; IV. Under Fire; V. The Combat Deepens; VI. Hit! VII. Corners of War; VIII. The Roll Call; IX. Smiles and Tears; X. In Hospital; XI. One Touch of Nature; XII. 'The Men are Splendid.'

The book is so full of moving incidents, stirring, tragic, and sometimes comic and humorous events, that I shall not scruple to appropriate a little of this thunder, and so make up an article which, I think, will be interesting to the patriotic readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. Mr. Milne tells little or nothing of the faults or disorderly conduct of Atkins, which must necessarily abound in an army of a quarter of a million—but he gives samples enough taken from all sources, and from the whole period of the war, to show the kind of metal of which the bulk is composed, and they are sufficient to outweigh all faults, to make all Englishmen—civilians, soldiers, and sailors alike—very proud of the men who have so nobly done their fighting for them. If, on the other hand, such a book may be said to minister to our vanity and foster vainglorious boasting, the satisfaction remains that here we have something genuine and real to justify us in our boasting.

* 'The Epistles of Atkins,' by James Milne, Author of 'The Romance of a Pro-Consul' &c. Being some of the Lights on Human Nature in the Ordeal of War, which illumine the Letters of the Common Soldier, written from South Africa to his People at Home; and so an answer to the question, 'How does it feel to be in battle?'

Now for a few haphazard extracts, the like of which may be found on every page of the book. I may add that Mr. Milne always introduces his extract with some pithy remark or bit of philosophic moralising. I must abstain from all that, and only extract from the extracts:

'You can't believe,' roars an Irishman, 'how happy I am when fighting! I feel as if it were a football match.'

'Be assured,' writes one, 'I am still a teetotaler. I have not had any beer since Christmas. We cannot get any!'

An Essex soldier in pursuit of cheese: 'All you have to do is to give it your address, and it will walk there provided it doesn't have sunstroke on the road.' He meant that it may melt in the summer heat.

'While lying there,' a smoker says, 'I lifted my head to fill my pipe. Why, would you believe it, a bullet hit the very place where my head had been, and banged flat on my rifle. Said I to myself, said I, "That smoke saved my life!"'

BATTLE IN BEING.—One writes about the advance to Magersfontein. 'You cannot see the enemy. He shoots at you, but you look in vain for him. It is fighting against rocks. You have nobody to shoot at, damn it! Why doesn't the Boer come out into the open and fight us fair in the teeth?'

UNDER FIRE.—'What are those insects buzzing around?' asks a Gordon drummer. 'Lad,' replies the Sergeant Major, 'they're not insects—they're bullets.'

'It makes you feel funny when you first get under fire. Your officer shouts, "Forward J Company," and you begin to march steadily towards the enemy. The bullets ping, ping, and you hear the cracks of explosives; you take a deep breath and shiver, as when you jump into cold water. At first you have a kind of gloomy foreboding, next an inclination to laugh, talk, or hum; but you are unable to do one or the other.'

Another writes: 'I gradually got used to the patter of the bullets and the shrieking of the shells—one gets a kind of bloodthirsty feeling which it is impossible to quell.' Says another: 'A peculiar sensation takes possession of you; you feel as if you could rush at them and tear them to pieces. All tiredness disappears like magic when the band begins to play.'

'It's a nasty sensation to hear the shells go by,' says a Highlander. 'One can hear them hissing in the air fully a mile away, though it seems as if they were on the top of you.'

'You might not credit it, but at Modder River I saw a man fall asleep at the firing line, fairly worn out.'

'When I was lying under the enemy's fire I was so fatigued that I fell asleep, but I got a queer waking, for a shell burst just a few yards behind me.'

'I got tired of firing and fell sound asleep, and dreamt I was down at Yarmouth, rowing on the sea with two young ladies; but I was awfully disappointed when I awoke, and I picked up my rifle and continued firing.'

HIT!—Two soldiers fighting side by side, when suddenly one lurches into the arms of the other. 'My poor chum,' says he, 'gave a groan and cried "Mother," and that word has been ringing in my ears ever since. But he died like a British soldier, and I hope he has gone to a better world.'

'A valiant fighter employed in the trenches on Spion Kop had his arm blown off close to the shoulder. He picks it up with the other hand saying, "My arm! my arm! Oh God, where's my arm." Raging with pain, he bounds out of the trenches and is instantly killed.'

'Thank God, I don't feel as bad as I look,' is the cheery hail of an officer with one side of his face almost gone.

'I can't ride, I can't drive, I can't fight any more,' cries a sentenced gunner, 'but I can die like a soldier for my Queen and country.'

'Tell father that he isn't the only one who will have a medal. Wait till he sees me.'

'It makes me feel like a General when I see in the papers about the good shooting of our gun, and think that I'm responsible for it.'

THE ROLL CALL.—'Isn't it horrible?' remarks a horse soldier on the slope of Spion Kop, 'it is more like a slaughterhouse.' The word is scarcely uttered when a shell falls plump beside the speaker, and he is a headless trunk, gnarled and twisted out of all human shape.

'A Derbyshire is losing grip of the frail hold which as "dangerously wounded" he has on the regimental roll. "Have you any special request to make?" "You might," he answers,

"write to poor mother and tell her that by the time she receives the letter I shall be laid low." "No, Chum," says the Sergeant, "you must not give way." The Derbyshire sleeps for a spell, and on waking whispers, "Ask mother to look after my dear children"—with that he passes."

"We are told of cases where, heads being blown off by shells, the bodies remain erect for a little, or rise up from the ground, rifle clutched in the right hand, even walk several yards. "A fellow in front of me walked about three yards without his head: a shell took it clean off, and he kept on walking; it made me feel sick, I can tell you."

SMILES AND TEARS. — 'A Connaught Ranger has had his arm broken by a shot, and it dangles from the tendons. He smokes hard and curses the enemy volubly, and his comrades know not whether to sympathise with him or laugh at him. Celtic banter is in the bosom of another Irishman when a shell explodes close to him at Glencoe. "Och, go to blazes wid yez." He is full of anger at having to retire from Glencoe, and flings it hissing at the shell.'

"When "Long Tom" was dropping 96-pound shells round about us, some one started singing "Why did I leave my little back room in Bloomsbury?" and the whole lot took it up.'

'Foightin', sorr; can't help it; couldn't resist the music any longer.' So said an Irish cook found in the fighting line instead of in his kitchen. 'And the other cooks, where are they?' 'They're foightin' too, sorr; couldn't help it, sorr; all making good practice, sorr.'

Just one other quotation to show 'One Touch of Nature':—

'The young Boer helped me up, and as the fall and a bullet in the foot had taken it all out of me, he propped me against a rock and gave me some water. Then he said in very broken English: "I save your life, do you know?" I nodded. He went on, "You know why I save your life?" I shook my head. He answered, "Because you are like my brother." He gave me a cigar, carried me on his back down the hill to near our camp, said "They find you all right here," shook my hand, and bolted.'

What I have said about this book and the bits I have quoted from it give but an imperfect view of its contents. I have found it interesting because the whole tone of it is a defence of the British army against the calumnies that have been heaped upon it by the enemies of our country abroad, and the worse than enemies at home. Naturally our soldiers will be proud of such a testimony to their good qualities as the book abounds with, and the mere civilian, like myself, will read it with pleasure. Mr. Milne is to be thanked for bringing together such a mass of unconscious testimony to their good qualities by the soldiers themselves—and I think, too, he may be congratulated on the way he has done it. The great value of the work lies in the fact that the matter comes from such widespread sources, and that the writers wrote their homely and truthful letters telling 'how it feels to be in battle' without dreaming that they would ever be woven by an expert into as sad and tragic a story as ever was written.

THE D.S.O.

The decoration of the Distinguished Service Order awarded to Major A. E. M. Norton, O.C. Field Artillery, in September last, recently arrived, and was presented to that officer on Saturday afternoon by his Excellency Lord Tennyson. Major Norton, the recipient of the honour, distinguished himself in many other instances than the 'gun incident' at Lindley, for which the decoration was given. The defence of the mud hut at Vredefort will be remembered, and also the occasion at Bethlehem, when, under a heavy and continuous fire from the enemy, Norton dressed the wound of Trooper Richardson, which had been caused by a shell, and by this action saved the soldier's life. The major, who has been in the South Australian forces about 14 years, is a nephew of Mr. Marston, of the publishing firm of Sampson Low, Marston & Co., London. His commission as lieutenant was obtained on August 6, 1896, he was advanced to the captaincy in 1898, and received his majority on November 5, 1900.—Adelaide Register, April 14, 1902.

(As the Adelaide Register has mentioned my name in the foregoing paragraph, I may state, with a little pride, that the only three relatives of mine who have been engaged in this terrible war have each of them been awarded the D.S.O. My sister's son, Major Norton, mentioned above; her grandson, Lieut. Herbert Reid, a youth of twenty-two, also a colonial officer; and Brigadier-General Norton Legge, a son of my first cousin. After a career of distinction he was killed in action early in this war.—E. MARSTON.)

VOLUME II. OF THE TIMES 'HISTORY OF THE WAR.'

'A SENSATIONAL WORK.'

The Daily Mail, in a long notice of the second volume of The Times 'History of the War,' says it is 'in many respects a sensational work—sensational in that it makes disclosures which up to now have been scrupulously concealed from the public by the Press Censorship and the studied vagueness of despatches. . . . The editor, Mr. Amery, does not shrink from assuming full responsibility for the information which has reached him.

'Without doubt his work will arouse a storm of criticism and obloquy. The volume is throughout of ENTHRALLING INTEREST, and it promises to be of immense value to the present and to future generations.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, which commenced its career when Queen Victoria was crowned, will appear as a Coronation Number next week on special paper, &c., and will give particulars of Books and other publications connected with the Coronation of King Edward VII., which we all hope will take place next month with all possible success, and with the bells ringing for peace as well as joy. The Boers have fought magnificently, they know they are beaten, and if they are wise will let their submission to our King come as the graceful Coronation tribute of worthy foemen who will make equally worthy subjects.

A correspondent of the Times writes: 'The late Mr. Schütz Wilson, whose death was recently announced, had for many years been a popular figure in artistic and dramatic circles. His father was Mr. Wilson of the Royal Exchange—a publisher of Radical principles which were abhorrent to the son. Mr. Schütz Wilson was first engaged for ten years in a great commercial house, and during this period acquired several languages which enabled him to master French, German, and Italian literature. He left the mercantile world to accept the post of assistant secretary of the Electric Telegraph Company; and when that concern was taken over by the Post Office, Mr. Schütz Wilson retired on a pension. Thenceforward he devoted himself to literary work such as he had occasionally practised before. He was the author of several novels which were translated into German, and of which "Philip Mannington" is perhaps the best; but "Alpine

"Ascents and Adventures" is, among his volumes of reprinted essays, historical and literary, the work of most permanent value. He was a prolific contributor to the reviews and magazines; his paper, "La Conciergerie," which appeared in the Quarterly Review, attracted considerable attention at the time it was published. Mr. Wilson was a noted figure at the Arts Club, where on Royal Academy election nights he had, for more than thirty years, proposed the health of members who had been selected as associates or members of the Royal Academy.

Mr. S. Levett Yeats, author of 'The Honour of Savelli,' has written for Cassell's Magazine a new serial story of the days of the Cavaliers and Roundheads, which he calls 'The Lord Protector.' The story will begin in the June number, and will be illustrated by Mr. W. H. Margetson.

MESSRS. G. P. Putnam's Sons have in the press for publication through their New York and London houses, under arrangement with Messrs. Hachette & Co., of Paris, a translation of the volume by Arvède Barine entitled 'La Jeunesse de la Grande Mademoiselle.' They purpose to include with their English version a series of historical illustrations. The studies of Arvède Barine cover the period between 1627-1652. The pictures of life in Paris at the Court of Anne of Austria, of the social circles of the Hotel Rambouillet, and among the dramatists of the school of Corneille, constitute an important addition to our knowledge of the times. The author's characterisations are exceptionally incisive and picturesque.

A special article on Jules Dalou, by Professor Lanteri, will appear in the Magazine of Art for June, which will also contain an article on H. S. Tuke, A.R.A., with two plates and seven illustrations of the artist's work, and the first article on the Royal Academy, with six illustrations.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish on May 27 a new volume in 'The Story of the Nations' series. It is a history of Mediæval Rome, by Mr. William Miller, author of 'The Balkans' in the 'Nations' series, and of 'Travel and Politics in the Near East.' The period covered by the volume is 1073-1600, and the work deals with Hildebrand, his career and plans; Arnold of Brescia and his times; Rome under Innocent III.; Frederick II. in Italy; the Story of Manfred; Conradin's Life and Death; the First Jubilee; Rome during the 'Babylonish Captivity' of the Popes; Rienzi, 'the Last of the Tribunes'; the Return of the Popes; the Orsini and the Colonna; the Pontificate of Aeneas Sylvius; the Borgias in Power; Rome and the Renaissance; the Epoch of Leo X.; Charles V. and Rome; the Jesuits and the Inquisition; Rome under Sixtus V.

In the catalogue of Messrs. Lawrie, 28 Paternoster Row, will be found complete lists of the apparatus and objects for teaching science and art. All subjects specified in the examinations are fully provided for in a clear tabulated form, easy of reference.

The theory of some scientific men that the world has almost reached the limit of its capacity to produce wheat is exploded in the article on 'The New Agriculture' in the June Scribner's, which shows how the work of the Agricultural Experiment Stations has removed this catastrophe indefinitely from the impending possibilities.

The 'hard lot of the farmer' is one of the commonplaces of political discussion, but few people realise the extent to which the farmer has been aided by science within the last decade. In the article referred to in Scribner's for June the remarkable results of the United States Agricultural Experiment Station work will be described for the first time in a popular manner by W. S. Harwood. He shows that a revolution in methods has been accomplished through the researches of one thousand trained scientific men, and that whole regions of the United States have turned to raising new products through the lessons taught by these stations. The article, which is fully illustrated, is a glimpse into 'a book of practical magic.'

Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge send us a catalogue of the valuable library of the late William Twopenny, Esq., of Woodstock Park, Sittingbourne, comprising Standard English and French Literature, Historical Works and Biographies, Works of Reference, Books on Architecture, Antiquities, and the Fine Arts, Topography, Early English Poetry, including Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' first edition, the best editions of the Elizabethan Dramatists, Ecclesiology, Publications of Learned Societies, Rare Tracts relating to Charles I. and II., the Civil War and the Commonwealth, Scarce Early Americana, Voyages and Travels, Books illustrated by Bewick and Cruikshank, Grimm's 'Fairy Tales,' first edition, Goldsmith's 'Vicar of Wakefield,' first edition, The Writings of Defoe, Swift, and Sterne, first editions, Rogers's 'Italy' and Poems, proofs, presentation copies, Turner's 'Southern Coast,' large paper, and engravings from his other Works, &c., which will be sold by auction by them on Monday, May 26, and three following days, at 1 o'clock precisely.

Messrs. Lamley will issue early in June a revised edition of 'The Silver Domino.' This satire, which caused a considerable stir when issued, has been partly rewritten and several new chapters added. Mr. John Lane issues the Colonial Edition.

We are informed that the old established weekly journal, the Christian Leader, has just been purchased by the proprietor of the Christian Weekly, a paper which, although only three months in existence, has already attained considerable success both in England and Scotland. It is the intention of the proprietor to amalgamate both journals under the combined title of the Weekly Leader, which will make its first appearance on Thursday, May 22. The principal features of both publications will be retained in the new journal, to which well-known and popular authors will contribute articles and stories.

An excellent tribute to the daring and enterprise of American toilers of the sea appears in the current number of Scribner's Magazine, from the pen of James B. Connolly, who pictures the Gloucester fisherman as the Viking of the present day. He owns fishing schooners that are the equal of the cup defenders, and are designed by the best designers. He takes risks that no yachtsman would take in any gale, and, moreover, he is often a man of wealth, education, and great influence in his community. The Island Reporter, commenting on Mr. Connolly's article, says: 'He draws the fisherman at first hand, being himself the son of a New England skipper.'

Mr. W. Clark Russell's popular romance, 'The Sea Queen,' is being published in a German edition under the title of 'Die Seekönigin.'

Messrs. Duckworth & Co. are publishing almost immediately another volume (the third) of their 'Greenback' Library. It is entitled 'A King and his Campaigners.'

The same publishers will also publish this month a volume of essays by Edward

Thomas, a young Oxford man. 'Horæ Solitariae,' as the book is called, is dedicated to Mr. Owen M. Edwards, Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College.

'THE GERMAN EMPIRE OF TO-DAY.'

The author of this volume says, truly enough, in his Preface: 'Owing, perhaps, to want of easily accessible information, there appears to be often a remarkable lack of rudimentary acquaintance with Germany under its modern aspects'; and he tells the reader that 'the object of these "Outlines" is to give a rough idea of some of the main lines of the formation and expansion of the German Empire, now the cynosure of all eyes in Europe, and around which there hovers a certain fascination for those who are interested in its past history, its present economic growth, and its future possibilities.' The work appears at a time when public attention in this country and elsewhere has been very forcibly called to Germany owing to the publication of the will of that Empire maker, the late Cecil Rhodes, who so highly appreciated the thoroughness of the Teutonic race and the far-seeing statesmanlike qualities of the Emperor William II., and who also ardently desired to bring about a good understanding between England, Germany, and the United States of America. Nothing more unexpected has happened in the history of Europe during the second half of the last century than the formation and remarkable progress of the German Empire; and none are more astonished at these rapid developments than those persons who remember the far-off days of the first half of that century when an Englishman had no idea of Germany as a united nation, which indeed it was not, but only as a congeries of States with interests often at variance, and who looked upon the Germans as a race of long-haired, blue-eyed, and spectacled professors, students, and virtuosi whose military prowess since Waterloo had had no better field for displaying itself than the abortive Schleswig-Holstein expedition of 1848, or the almost equally abortive insurrections of that same annus mirabilis. Such persons also remember what hopes were inspired by the meeting in May 1848 at Frankfort-on-Main of the National Assembly, whose task it was to draw up a new Constitution. This Constitution, establishing a German Empire with an hereditary head of the State, was voted in May 1849, and the Imperial Crown offered to King Frederick William IV. of Prussia; but, as all the States of the German Confederation had not accepted it, the King refused the crown. Then many States withdrew their representatives from the National Assembly, and the rest were forcibly dispersed. So the Constitution of 1815 had to be restored, and the Federal Diet resumed its sittings at Frankfort. 'But,' as 'Veritas' says, 'the power of the Germanic Confederation as a whole sank steadily, while the might of Prussia continually increased.' At last, in 1861, the soldier-king, William I., succeeded his effete brother, Frederick William IV., on the Prussian throne, and the following year appointed Bismarck to the posts of Foreign and Prime Minister. He it was who, with the War Minister, General Albrecht von Roon, and Count Hellmuth von Moltke, chief of the General Staff, brought to such a pitch of perfection the German army that it vanquished Austria and the States allied with her in 1866, and France in 1870-71. After having, in the first two chapters, outlined German history up to 1871, the author narrates the national progress since then. Beginning with the Constitution of the Empire and the independent rights of the twenty-five Federated States he proceeds to consider the economic condition of the Empire, and in so doing deals with such burning questions as free trade, protection, syndicates, the increase of internal trade and foreign commerce, much of which increase, as he is careful to point out, is due to improvements and innovations resulting from 'a scientific organisation of industries and commerce.' He shows how the increase of overseas commerce has stimulated shipbuilding to such an extent that the German mercantile marine is now the second greatest in the world! Such an enormous development of seaborne commerce necessitates as a natural consequence an increased navy to protect maritime interests. The fourth chapter is devoted to the army and the navy, and will be read with interest and profit even by the man in the street. Then follow four chapters on Commercial Policy, Traffic Policy, Colonial Policy and Colonial Possessions, all of which abound in information of more or less interest to business men. That on traffic policy describes the great progress made by Germany in ocean steam navigation, in high-speed electrical traction, and in canalisation. Perhaps the ninth chapter, on Education, is of the greatest importance. For, when all is said and done, it is education—that is to say, thorough practical training, both physical and mental—which has made the German Empire of to-day. We warmly commend this valuable book to the serious attention of all Englishmen who can ungrudgingly appreciate the pluck and energy of those great men who established the German Empire on so firm a basis, and who would like (as who would not?) to see the army, navy, and educational system of the British Empire placed on as equally satisfactory a footing as that of Germany.

UNDECIDED.

They were looking over the new books in a Fifth Avenue bookstall and found John Luther Long's 'Naughty Nan.' 'It doesn't sound historical,' said the first woman, hopefully.

'She can't have been a woman with a past or he would never have called her anything so inconsequential as "Naughty,"' suggested Number Two. 'It ends happily,' announced the first woman, after a hasty glimpse of the last page, 'Perhaps,' said Number Two, in the hushed voice of one who hesitates to believe in great joy, 'Perhaps it's just a jolly frivolous little book.'

They bought it.

The severe salesman assured them they had better take 'The Valley of Decision,' or Gorky's 'Twenty-six and One': but they had the courage of their convictions.—American Stationer.

Letters to the Editor

SIR HENRY THOMPSON'S HANDBOOK ON THE MOTOR CAR.

SIR,—In your number of May 10 you were good enough to give me a friendly review of my elementary handbook of 'The Motor Car,' and in the latter portion you say that 'I am straining my advocacy a little "when I speak of carriage horses driven in "the country at 15 miles an hour."

If, however, you refer to page 46 you will find I made no such statement, but that I referred only to the fast-trotting American horses driven with a very light frame and hickory wheels; and they can do it quite easily, and even 16.

I am, yours faithfully,

HENRY THOMPSON.

[We are much obliged to Sir Henry Thompson for this correction; it seems that it is our reviewer who has strained the argument a little.—ED.]

Re AN ENQUIRY.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. T. Francis Howell, will find Mr. George Moore's play, 'The Legend of Diarmuid and Grania,' contained in the pamphlet issued from this office under the title of 'Samhain.'

Faithfully yours,

T. FISHER UNWIN.

DEATH OF A FAMOUS EDITOR.

The death is announced of Mr. E. L. Godkin, formerly editor of the New York Evening Post and the New York Nation. Mr. Godkin died at Greenaway House, Torquay, where he had been living in retirement for some time.

He was born in county Wicklow, Ireland, and was once a well-known war correspondent of the Daily News. Then he went to America, became a citizen, and a famous editor.

Mr. Godkin was one of the most uncompromising enemies that Tammany Hall ever had to encounter. He was a consistent and forcible fighter on the side of honest government, and it was due to his efforts that Tammany was frequently beaten at the polls and some of its leaders were sent to prison.

He earned the enmity of the anti-British population of the United States by his friendly attitude towards this country, and was probably the most bitterly lampooned editor of his time. He was also the original 'Mugwump,' an appellation coined by his old-time political and editorial opponent, the late Mr. Charles A. Dana.—Daily Express.

WHAT A HALF-TONE SCREEN IS.*

A half-tone screen consists of two pieces of glass, each ruled with alternating black and white lines of equal dimensions at an angle of forty-five degrees. These two pieces are then cemented together with the lines at right angles, thus making a grating or screen. This screen is placed in the camera next to the sensitive plate, and the pictures photographed through it. The screen is the foundation for the process, and the principle involved has not been changed since the earliest patent was granted. Numerous other methods have been tried, but the mechanical lines of the half-tone screen have not been improved upon. But for this mechanically ruled screen we would not be able to reproduce colours with three or four printings that formerly required from ten to twenty impressions in lithography. All other methods that have been tried with a view to improving on the half-tone screen have a rough and unpleasant appearance, while the regular lines and dots of the half-tone give us a smooth, soft, clean picture, with all the modulation of the photograph. Did it ever occur to you that the surface of the half-tone plate is composed of thousands of little dots, every one of a different size, and so small that you have to use a magnifier to see them; but if one were missing or not of the proper size it would show in the proof? Yet it is true, and they are all watched by every man who handles the plate from the time the negative is made until the plate is delivered, and if one is missing it must be put in or a new plate made; that is, if high-grade work is desired. How many of these dots are there in a square inch of half-tone? The ordinary screen, composed of 150 lines to the inch, has 22,500 black dots, and an equal number of white spaces. You talk about detail in your business. When you have to look after 22,500 dots to every square inch of your work, and see that none become lost, strayed, or stolen, you can talk about being busy. Just for the novelty of the thing we figured up the number of dots required to make up the surface of the large Dowie plate made by our concern, which measured approximately 24 by 98 inches, and was made on 133-line screen. There were 2,304 square inches in the plate, with 17,689 black dots per square inch—a total of 40,756,456; so you see we need good eyes and good glasses in order to make perfect printing plates. In addition to looking after all these little dots, the process man has to keep an eye on the weather. If the wind changes to the east or south, or it is warm or cold, damp or dry, he must change his methods and his chemicals to suit; and while he is reasonably sure he can deliver the cut on the day promised, he could not guarantee to do it, because there are hundreds of things that could happen before it was delivered into your hands that would be small in themselves, but would make the cut useless to you. So when your engraver tells you that he had an accident with your plate and cannot deliver it until the next day, just be charitable with him, and remember the 22,500 little dots per square inch that he has to keep in place.

A LAKE OF INK.

The most unusual curiosity in the strange, uncanny land by the Colorado River is what the naturalists in California call a lake of ink. The scientific journals in Los Angeles and San Diego have discussed time and time again what the lake of ink really is. It is a great pool of a black fluid that resembles black writing ink more than anything else. It is about an acre in area. The surface of the lake is coated with ashes from the volcanoes to the thickness of about half a foot, and the explorer in those parts who is not looking out for this freak of nature would be very apt to walk into it. Surveyors have found that the lake is some 300 yards deep in some places, but no bottom can be found in others.

There is nothing but theory as to the source of the supply of the lake, but no one seems to know the component parts of the acre of black fluid. The Indians say it is composed of the blood of bad Indians who are suffering in their hell amid the volcanoes. Samples of the lake have been taken to Yuma and Los Angeles for tests and examination. It is good for common marking purposes. Cotton goods that have been soaked with the strange black fluid keep their color for months, even when exposed to the sun, and the goods have a stiffness that is somewhat like weak starch. A gallon of the lake fluid was sent to the Smithsonian Institution the other day for analysis.—American Stationer.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, Mr. J. Shaylor in the chair, the sum of £115. 8s. 4d. was voted for the relief of 59 members and widows of members.

HAD TO HISS.

Brander Matthews received tickets for the first night, of course, says the New York Times. Did ever an author bring out a play in New York without sending tickets to Professor Matthews? Contrary to his custom, Mr. Matthews made use of his passes on this occasion. He was downtown; he wanted to see the play; the house was sold; so why not? The next day his opinion was eagerly called for by one of the classes at Columbia. 'Well, gentlemen,' said the literary freethinker, 'the play was in four acts, and I was there as the guest of the author. After the first act the audience sat silent and I applauded. After the second act I sat quiet while the audience hissed.' The professor took a long drawn and reminiscent pull at his cigarette, then held it at arm's length and flicked off the ashes. 'And the third act?' 'Well, gentlemen,' and there was a gleam of satisfaction in the professor's eye, 'after the third act I went out and bought standing room and came back and hissed, too.'

Notices of Books

From Mr. Howard Wilford Bell.—'Some Impressions of Oxford,' by Paul Bourget. English Version by M. C. Warrilow, with drawings by Edmund H. New. It is always pleasant to learn how others view our great institutions, and the pleasure is enhanced when the critic is of so courteous and appreciative a disposition as M. Bourget. Since Venice he tells us the sight of no other city has carried his thoughts so far away from the present as Oxford. For its ancient buildings he has the most profound admiration. The picture he draws of the average undergraduate derives something, we are afraid, from the warmth of his imagination. It is recognisable certainly, but is a little too careless and flamboyant. M. Bourget would hardly be a Frenchman unless he had an observant eye for the feminine attractions of Oxford. Indeed he notices most things, and if his impressions strike one as being rather more superficial than sound, the gracefulness of their expression quite disarms criticism. The drawings which Mr. New has contributed to the work are appropriately dainty.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Isabella' and 'The Eve of St. Agnes,' by John Keats, with illustrations by R. Anning Bell. Each of the two poems contained in this dainty volume is a thing of beauty, to illustrate which may seem as unnecessary as the gilding of a lily. Nevertheless, it may be stated that these masterpieces of English verse have had justice done them by Mr. R. Anning Bell, who has embellished the two poems with seventeen graceful designs. Most of these illustrations have already appeared in the larger edition of Keats's Poems, forming a volume of the 'Endymion Series'; but some have been specially drawn, and are now published for the first time.

From the same.—'The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyam,' with illustrations by R. Anning Bell. This is a beautiful reprint at the Chiswick Press of the First Version by Edward Fitzgerald of 'The Rubáiyát,' originally published in 1859. It contains nineteen admirable illustrations by Mr. R. Anning Bell, which add to the charm of an established favourite.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'Henry IV., Part 1,' edited by H. W. Ord, M.A. ('Black's School Shakespeare.') The play of 'Henry IV.' is of all the immortal poet's works one of the best suited for educational purposes, since it possesses so large an historical interest, frequently relieved by broad comedy. The present edition is well edited, printed, and bound. In the introduction is much useful information regarding the plot of the play, its source, the date of writing, historical accuracy, and so forth, and a critical analysis is given of the construction, the characters, and the interpretation. The notes, which are comparatively few, are chiefly concerned with what is typically Elizabethan in the text, and included in the work is a well-considered examination paper. The book is calculated to be of substantial service as a class manual.

From the same.—'The British Isles,' and 'Europe, including the British Isles,' by L. W. Lyde, M.A. These are further volumes in Messrs. Black's serviceable series of 'Elementary Geography Readers,' of which Mr. Lyde is the general editor. The subject-matter of each has evidently been very carefully written, and in the matter of suitable type and illustrations the volumes are exceptionally well equipped.—We have also received from the same publishers 'France de Montorel: Roman de la Guerre de Cent Ans (1418-29),' abridged and annotated from Jules de Glouvet's historical novel, 'La France,' by F. B. Kirkman, B.A., and 'A First Course of Essay-Writing,' by J. H. Fowler, M.A. Both works should be found of excellent service as class books.

From Mr. F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig.—'Allgemeine Bibliographie.' Sechshundvierzigster Jahrgang, 1901. In this forty-sixth annual volume of the Brockhaus Universal Bibliography, which gives a monthly list of the more important new German and foreign literary productions, the Dutch, English, French, German, Italian, Polish, Russian, and Scandinavian literatures are represented, the total number of titles being 4,718. These are classified under ten heads: Encyclopædias and Literary Science; Theology and Philosophy; Educational Science; Law and Politics; Mathematics and Natural Sciences, Military Science; Medicine; Geography and History; Philology and Antiquities; Belles Lettres and Art; and Trade, Industry, Agriculture. An index of names of authors facilitates reference to this carefully compiled work, which must prove of the greatest service to all interested in books. Indeed, the well-known firm F. A. Brockhaus merits the gratitude of the book trade for publishing this excellent bibliography.

From the Catholic Truth Society.—'The Faith of Old England,' by the Rev. Vincent Horn-yold, S.J. In a beautifully printed volume, published at a remarkably low price, Father Horn-yold gives a popular manual of instructions in the Catholic Faith, viewed from a doctrinal and historical standpoint. It is lucidly written, can be easily understood, and its arguments are supported by quotations from Scripture, the Councils of the Church, and the Writings of the Fathers. The Manual forms two parts. Part I. is entitled 'The Faith of Old England.' It begins by stating and disputing the claims of modern Anglicans to be English Catholics, and asserts the constitutional weakness of the Church of England as a teaching authority. The following, among other subjects, are then dealt with: the claims of the Bishops of Rome to authority over all the Churches; the Church in Britain before St. Augustine; the authority of the Bishops of Rome in England until the time of Henry VIII.; how England was cut off from communion with Rome; the principal Orders in Council and penal laws enacted by successive Parliaments for the suppression of the Catholic religion in England; does the Church of England recognise the Sovereign of England as the only Supreme Governor in spiritual and ecclesiastical things? the question as to the validity of Anglican orders; the official utterances of the Anglican Bishops of to-day as to the priestly office and the service substituted for the Mass in the Church of England. These subjects fill twenty-two chapters. Part II. consists of seven chapters, containing 'A Brief Exposition of the Principal Doctrines and Practices of the Catholic Church.' This is not the place for discussing the subjects dealt with in this interesting work, which merits the attention of English Churchmen—whether High, Low, or Broad.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited.—'The Ancestor: a Quarterly Review of County and Family History, Heraldry, and Antiquities.' No. 1, April 1902. This new quarterly is full of good things for those who take an interest in the subjects of which it treats. The first volume promises well for the success of the venture. Among the more notable articles are: 'Some Anecdotes of the Harris Family,' by the Earl of Malmesbury; 'The Miniatures at Belvoir,' by Lady Victoria Manners; 'The English Gentleman,' by Sir George R. Sitwell, Bart.; 'The Origin of the Fitzgeralds,' by J. Horace Round; 'Heraldry Revived,' by Oswald Barron; and 'The King's Coronation Ornaments,' by W. H. St. John Hope. The majority of these papers are illustrated. There are also sections devoted to 'Family History from the Public Records,' and 'Family History from Private MSS.,' while, at the head of his 'Editorial Notes,' the conductor gives some explanation of the scheme of the new magazine, and the precise object it is intended to subserve. In the next issue we understand it is proposed to begin a series of articles entitled 'Our Oldest Families,' which will deal in a systematic manner with those families whereof the pedigree can be traced so far back as the twelfth century. The first thus laid under contribution will be the Tichbornes of Tichborne, and the family of Wake. From the frequency with which Mr. J. Horace Round's name appears in this opening volume, we judge that he has had much to do with the conception of this new quarterly.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Spindle-side of Scottish Song,' by Jessie P. Findlay. This is an excellently planned volume, and as sympathetically executed as planned. There are ten chapters in all, each treating of some gifted Scottish songstress. Among the subjects are Lady Grisell Hume, Mrs. Alison Cockburn, Jean Elliot, Susanna Blamire, Lady Anne Lindsay, Joanna Baillie, and that incomparable singer, Baroness Nairne, whose 'Land o' the Leal' is one of the gems of Scottish poetry. It is curious, as the authoress points out in her introduction, that the majority of these singers are women of only one song, and this remains true despite the fact that several have written many other lyrics. Lady Grisell

Hume, for instance, is principally known by the verses which end with the line, 'And were my heart light, I wad dee'; Lady Anne Lindsay wrote the far-famed 'Auld Robin Gray'; Mrs. John Hunter, wife of the celebrated anatomist, is the author of a scarcely less popular song, 'My mother bids me bind my hair'; and Mary Campbell composed both words and music of the stirring 'March of the Cameron Men.' Those who derive pleasure from Scottish minstrelsy—and surely there are few with any depth to their nature who do not—will find Miss Findlay's volume a perfect treasure-house of agreeable associations.

From the same.—'A Primer of Physiology,' by Alex. Hill. This little book of a hundred pages should prove useful to those who have not time to study physiology in detail. The author writes with clearness and point, and his diagrams are well chosen and carefully drawn.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Notes on Writing Orders and Reports in the Field,' by Captain H. C. Evans. This is a little book written with the object of increasing the volunteer officer's store of technical information. It sets forth clearly and directly the main considerations of the subject without any of the assumption of previous knowledge that usually distinguishes the Service manuals. As a rule, the volunteer officer is engaged in business during the day, and can only devote a brief time in the evening to the study of his military vocations. Such a work as this, then, which epitomises the teachings of a most important subject, will be invaluable to him, and should be received with the utmost appreciation. Captain Evans has both arranged and treated his subject well.

From the same.—'Trumpet and Bugle Sounds, with Words for Cavalry, Imperial Yeomanry, Royal Artillery, and Army Service Corps; also Infantry Bugle Sounds with Words,' compiled and arranged by H. C. Atherley, Bandmaster, 1st Royal Irish Regiment. The title of this little book sufficiently reveals its character, and it only remains to be added that the work has been performed with excellent skill and judgment.—We have also received from Messrs. Gale & Polden a copy of their 'Views of Winchester College,' a work that affords a very realistic idea both of the character of the building and the educational life that is carried on in connection with it. Included in the illustrations are representations of the various college games and portraits of the different masters.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.—'Under the Dome,' by the Right Rev. Arthur F. Winnington Ingram, D.D., Bishop of London. No more appropriate title could have been selected than that given to this volume of sermons delivered on Sunday afternoons in the metropolitan cathedral church, a volume that will be gladly welcomed and highly appreciated by many far away from the Metropolis and that great Dome 'which,' to use the Bishop's words, 'is at once the special fascination and the peculiar mystery of St. Paul's Cathedral.' All these sermons, nineteen in number, are characterised by a profound knowledge of the needs, trials, temptations, and hopes of all classes in this myriad-peopled city—a knowledge acquired during a long and varied experience in the priestly office. A very striking feature of most of these sermons is that while they are eminently spiritual, they are also thoroughly practical; and, as an instance, we note the last of the group of four sermons on Faith, in which the Bishop deals with the burning questions of over-crowding and demoralisation in East London, and of the strenuous endeavours of good men of various religious denominations to remedy 'a state of things which is a menace to the stability and happiness of the State of England.'

From Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd.—'Donegal Fairy Stories,' collected and told by Seumas MacManus. This book comes to us by way of America, though why it did not at once find a publisher in England it would be difficult to say. Mr. MacManus is an accomplished 'shanachy,' re-telling his old Irish legends with much native wit and an abundance of charm and vivacity; no matter what absurdity he has to relate, it is all done with the air of one relating a real and actual experience. The illustrations are original and clever, but for some reason or other they do not quite seem to fit into the text, as all good illustrations should. There is very little that is distinctively Irish about them, while Mr. MacManus has entered into the true spirit of his stories, so that they lack neither Irish wit nor Irish good-humour.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Buller's Campaign with the Natal Field Force of 1900,' by E. Blake Knox, B.A., M.D. The extreme interest of this volume in view of recent events need scarcely be enlarged upon. It is, of course, true that Dr. Knox writes from the view point principally of the medical man, and that the object of his work is largely to make known what first aid to the wounded on a battlefield really consists of, so that others may take advantage of his experience; but, apart from this, there is much that throws light on the campaign generally. The position of an army surgeon with a fighting unit, as Dr. Knox points out, is one that has exceptional advantages for impartial observation. He is, in fact, 'the man on the stile,' and his professional training will have given him a quick apprehension of the course of events. Nor will he be hampered in his criticism by many of the restrictions that would undoubtedly influence the military man, while his duties will have frequently brought him on conversational terms with members of the opposing force, whose opinions he will, like Dr. Knox, be able to record. So much by way of preface. Turning to the book proper, we find that it well realises the anticipations of interest that its subject arouses. Apart from a short prologue, it consists of nine chapters, which are respectively devoted to a description of the events associated with the march to the Tugela, the battles of Taba Myama, Spion Kop, and Vaal Krantz, the engagements round Colenso and Hart's Hill, and the battles of Pieter's Hill, Laing's Nek, and Belfast. It will thus be seen that it was the author's privilege to be present at almost every important battle of the campaign. Naturally, the chapter treating of Spion Kop will be turned to with great interest. We can hardly say that it directly furnishes any fresh evidence, but there are undoubtedly one or two points on which it is confirmatory of previous impressions. Throughout the book the author's 'plain unvarnished tale' produces a far more realistic and ghastly idea of the horrors of war than any more artificially written book would do. It is embellished with a large number of illustrations, including portraits of General Buller, Colonel Thorneycroft, the Earl of Dundonald, General Louis Botha, and Colonel Sir Thomas Gallwey, and several maps and battle plans.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Lady Paramount,' by Henry Harland. Much is expected from the writer of a story so dazzlingly successful as 'The Cardinal's Snuff-Box.' It has, however, no unworthy successor in the book before us, wherein Mr. Harland tells how a young, beautiful, and wealthy Italian lady, the Countess of Sampaolo, partly of her own accord and partly prompted by her friend, Miss Sandus, a charmingly sympathetic and still pretty little old lady of seventy-five years, resolves to go to England and find out her English cousin, Anthony Craford, and see what he is like. 'And then,' as she tells her kind old guardian, Commendatore Fregi, whose charge over her terminates the very day of the story's opening, which is her twenty-second birthday, 'And then—well, if he's nice, who knows what may happen?' Accordingly, in defiance of the old Commendatore's remonstrances on the folly and impropriety of such a plunge, the Countess Susanna of Sampaolo starts that very night for Venice on the way to London, travelling as the Countess Torrebianca. Arrived in London she goes to the house of Miss Sandus, who accompanies her to Craford, where she hires Craford New Manor, which belongs to her cousin, pretexting that she does so in order to be able to hear Mass at Anthony's famous quaint old red-brick Tudor residence, Craford Old Manor, which has a secret chapel and a priest's hiding hole; for the Craford's are one of those old Catholic families whose boast it is that they have never lost the Faith. Anthony is away from home when the house was let by his friend and 'contrapuntal house-mate, monitor, land-agent, and man of business,' Mr. Adrian Willes, 'by profession a composer and singer of songs.' On his return Anthony is informed of the advent of the fair Countess Torrebianca and Miss Sandus by Adrian, a somewhat eccentric personage, much resembling Harold Skimpole, whose talk is often extravagantly artificial, and he himself seems to us rather too 'precious.' When Anthony encounters the pretended Countess Torrebianca he falls an easy prey to her charms; and, except for some mystification on her part, which temporarily retards its progress, the course of their true love does run smooth. The plot of this pleasant recital is of the slightest and the incidents are few; but it abounds in graphic descriptions of scenery in England and Italy, in piquant sketches of character, and in sparkling passages, which flash like gems in this work of a literary composer so gifted as the author again proves himself to be.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Investigators,' by J. S. Fletcher. Mr. Fletcher is the kind of writer who calls an eye-glass a 'monocle.' He christens one of his characters Natthali Hopps; there are also a girl called Hermione, and a man named Klootz. Dr. Williams (another typical name) is a naughty man whom Mr. Fletcher wishes to appear impressive. The intelligent reader will guess from all this that the author is sensational in style and conventional in his methods. The book is exciting; we confess to being kept out of bed later than was good for us; but apart from its general smartness and movement there is no real merit to be found in it. As literature it cannot seriously be considered; but probably Mr. Fletcher knows this as well as we do. We commend it to those who like excitement, and do not mind their literary susceptibilities being constantly wounded.

From the same.—'Woman: the Sphinx,' by Fergus Hume. There is the right kind of raw material in this novel for a really fine piece of work, but for some reason or other Mr. Hume allows his chance to slip through his fingers. He is not deeply interested in psychology, and is too obviously anxious to astound his readers. As a study in dipsomania, however, his novel is interesting, and there are one or two character-sketches well and deftly drawn. Agnes Jersome is the victim of inherited drink mania. The disease breaks out at intervals; when she is entirely herself she is almost a saint, but when insanity has possession of her she is little better than a devil. She is the 'sphinx' of the title. She leads a double life—that of a country girl, innocent, fresh, and constantly employed in doing good deeds, and that of a mad adventuress in Paris, giving herself up to the most degrading vices conceivable. In Mr. Hume's story these characters, in reality one, are treated as separate women, and it is characteristic of the author's weak handling of his plot that the secret is out before it should be. The consequence is that at the critical moment—at the psychological climax of the story—the reader is not in the least bit surprised, though Mr. Hume would have him gasp with astonishment. Still, in spite of obvious faults, this is a clever and, at times, a moving tale.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Siepmann's German Series, Elementary': Schrader, 'Friedrich der Grosse,' edited by R. H. Allpress. Zastrow, 'Wilhelm der Siegreiche,' edited by E. P. Ashe, M.A. The first of these two additions to Mr. Otto Siepmann's German Series contains Ferdinand Schrader's vigorous narrative of what he himself styles 'the terrible savage war storms which during seven years devastated flourishing countries and brought death and ruin upon their inhabitants.' To this interesting story of the campaigns of the monarch here designated as Der Heldenkönig Mr. Allpress has prefixed a sketch of Prussian history and has added such notes as are requisite. An alphabetical list of strong verbs and a vocabulary supply needful help to the student. While one admires Frederick's resourcefulness and generalship during this terrible war, and his care for his subjects after it was over, one nevertheless regrets that he did not refrain from the wanton attack on Austria in 1741, of which the Seven Years' War was the inevitable result. 'Till he began war,' says Macaulay, 'it seemed possible, even probable, that the peace of the world would be preserved.' Frederick himself said: 'Ambition, interest the desire of making people talk about me, carried the day, and I decided for war.' Every student who reads this book ought to read Macaulay's essay on Frederick the Great as an antidote to it. The second of these volumes, Karl Zastrow's 'Wilhelm der Siegreiche,' can be read with less mingled feelings. Everyone must sympathise with the misfortunes of the beautiful and patriotic Queen Louisa of Prussia (more unfortunate than the Empress Maria Theresa, because she did not live to see her country freed from foreign domination), and of her royal consort, King Frederick William III., and their two sons, the younger of whom (whose biography is here given) subsequently became the German Emperor, William I. The career of the future emperor is well told, from his first appearance as lieutenant until the end of his honourable career. Mr. Ashe has efficiently discharged his duty as editor of this excellent biography.

From the same.—Macmillan's 'New History Readers' (Senior). There are fifty readings on English History in this volume, which begins with a description of Early Britain and its people, and concludes with readings on England's recent rule in India, Egypt, and South Africa, supplemented by a narrative of the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales round the Empire on board the 'Ophir.' The reader is well written, clearly printed, and capitally illustrated.

From the same.—Macmillan's 'Summary of English History on the Concentric Plan' (Senior). Within the brief compass of 52 pages are here given a summary of English History from the earliest period until 1901, a chronological list of events in British history, a similar list of events in the expansion of the Empire, and a chronological table of the sovereigns of England.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Savage Island,' by Basil Thomson. 'Niue, more commonly known as Savage Island, lies 1,000 miles N.N.E. of New Zealand, and 300 miles S.S.E. of Samoa, in the loneliest spot in that part of the Pacific.' Fifteen years ago, Fataaiki, King of Savage Island, addressed a letter to Queen Victoria asking for a protectorate 'in order that this weak island of ours may be made strong.' The English Government took thirteen years to think over the matter, and then sent Mr. Basil Thomson to visit the island; the result of his visit was a 'favourable answer to the petition forwarded thirteen years before.' As the island has never been surveyed and as nothing is known about it in this country, it will be seen at once that Mr. Thomson's well-written account of his sojourn there is of great value. He has chapters on 'Affairs of State,' 'Some Historical Records,' 'The Ancient Faith,' 'A Native Entertainment,' 'Tongan Music,' &c. Altogether the book is as complete as one could desire.

From the same.—'Practical Legislation,' by Lord Thring, K.C.B., late Parliamentary Counsel. 'The following treatise was written many years ago for the instruction of the assistant draughtsmen in the office of the Parliamentary Counsel.' It subsequently went out of print, and is now republished by the consent of the Government. The book, which is printed on excellent paper with generous margins, treats of the composition and language of Acts of Parliament and business documents. Though technical in subject, its treatment is not above the average intelligence, and the work should prove invaluable to those interested in the framing of Bills, &c.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'A Lover of Music,' by Henry Van Dyck. We have rarely read a more original prayer than that which Mr. Van Dyck places before his preface; we can assure him that, as far as this book is concerned, it is quite unnecessary. His short stories are, as he himself prays that they may be, honestly written, clearly thought out, and pure (in the anti-Philistine sense of the word). The tale that gives the title to the volume is placed in a backwoods village of North America, and has for hero a French Canadian. The illustrations, by Mr. W. Appleton Clarke, are very beautiful: they are produced by zinco-plate, with delicate touches of colour which reveal the hand of a true artist.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'5,000 Facts and Fancies: a Cyclopædia of Important, Curious, Quaint, and Unique Information in History, Literature, Science, Art, and Nature, including Noteworthy Historical Events, Civil, Military, and Religious Institutions, Scientific Facts and Theories, Natural Curiosities, Famous Buildings, Monuments, Statues, Paintings, and other Works of Art and Utility, celebrated Literary Productions, Sobriquets and Nicknames, Literary Pseudonyms, Mythological and Imaginary Characters, Political and Slang Terms, Derivations of Peculiar Words and Phrases, &c. &c.,' by William Henry P. Phyfe. The author is already known as an industrious compiler of books, but in the present instance he may be said to have surpassed himself. Even the lengthy title of this bulky volume of over eight hundred pages scarcely conveys an idea of all the varied information it contains. Mr. Phyfe's object has been a most laudable one. In his experience of life he has found that people are continually confronted in their conversation and reading with queries they are unable to answer, owing to the want of suitable books. It is not that explanatory volumes do not exist, but that they are each limited to certain limited areas; consequently elucidation of the ordinary queries of every-day life necessitates the possession of a large reference library. The purpose of his present work has been to gather all the required information into one volume, which in a concise manner shall satisfy all the ordinary man's requirements. Of such a work it is impossible to pronounce an authoritative opinion until one has had it in actual use for some time; but we have applied many test questions, and in each case have found them very satisfactorily solved. The difficulty of course lies in the matter of selection, and this apparently the author has not been altogether able to surmount. His explanations, it should always be remembered, do not apply to the more complex problems of life, but to those simpler obscurities which turn up in the course of ordinary conversation.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Religio Laici: a series of Studies addressed to Laymen,' by the Rev. H. C. Beeching, M.A.,

Professor of Pastoral Theology at King's College, London, and Chaplain to the Hon. Soc. of Lincoln's Inn. The important posts occupied by the writer of this volume entitle him to speak with authority on the questions with which it deals. In his Preface he tells us that in writing these eight papers he has had in view persons of general intelligence, and not trained thinkers, and that the arguments they contain are aimed at certain prejudices in the attitude of such persons with regard to current views and controversies. 'Christianity and Stoicism' is the title of the first essay, which contests the idea that Christianity is merely a refined system of emotional morality on which has been grafted an alien and superfluous system of dogmatics. The second treats of the spirit of the English Church as exhibited in the literature of the seventeenth century, and introduces the reader into the good company of the judicious Hooker, Bishop Andrewes, Dr. John Donne, pious George Herbert, and Nicholas Ferrar, from whose works he makes apt quotations. Izaak Walton's 'Life of Donne' serves as an excellent text for a vigorous protest against the attacks of the late Matthew Arnold and Mr. Leslie Stephen on Donne and his biographer. In the fourth and fifth papers the cause of the clergy is championed against the indictments of ignorant people, and modern clerical ideals are defended and justified. The last three papers treat of very burning questions, viz.: 'Poverty of the Clergy,' 'Fallacies in the Ritual Controversy,' and 'The Church and Elementary Education.' Thorough knowledge of the subject in hand and breadth of view in dealing with it are conspicuous in every one of these interesting papers.

From Verlag von M. Spigatis, Leipzig.—'Beiträge zur Kenntnis des Schrift-, Buch- und Bibliothekswesens herausgegeben von Karl Dziatzko, VII.' This seventh part of contributions to the knowledge of manuscript, book, and library work contains six articles. Konrad Haebler, on modern book and library work in Spain, gives an unfavourable account of the position of public library officials, whose pay is little better than that of those in Portugal, where, after fifteen years' service in the Bibliotheca Nacional, the salary is only five pounds monthly; Hans Leonhard on the legal position of booksellers, printers, and binders in German University towns from 1550 to 1730; W. Falckenheimer, Bibliography of the printed rolls of German universities; K. Dziatzko, the type and the printing of Gutenberg's 42-line Bible; the same, the proposed tax on bound books as it affects the public, especially libraries; Max Spigatis, English literature at the Frankfurt Fair from 1561 to 1620. This article is of great interest as illustrating the relations between English and German publishers during the period in question. 'Only large and important firms could undertake the long journey from England to Germany; such a journey did not pay small firms with few or unimportant publications. When John Bill, the London publisher, wanted to visit the Frankfurt-on-M. Easter Fair of 1613 he was obliged to start from London at the beginning of February; and, when returning from the Easter Fair of 1611, only got back to London after the beginning of April; so that we must suppose it took two months for a London bookseller to visit the Frankfort Easter Fair.'

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—'How to Make an Index,' by Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. Index making is one of those things that seem exceedingly easy until one comes to make the attempt; and no doubt a simple index to a book of ordinary character presents no remarkable difficulties. But there are indexes and indexes, and anyone who has occasion frequently to consult books will know the exasperating effect produced by an inconsistent, unsystematic style. Apparently the usual operator commences with some idea in his head; before he has gone very far he discards this because he probably finds that the space will not admit of its complete execution; but he never makes any attempt to correct his previous work, and henceforth all is confusion. Mr. Wheatley sets forth in admirable fashion the true value and correct methods of indexing. He divides his book into two parts, the first being historical and chiefly intended, we suppose, as a kind of placebo for the practical advice that follows in the second half. Many of his contentions will no doubt admit of argument. In matters of so nice a description authorities will always be found to disagree. But we are quite sure that those who are about to set to work on an index could scarcely do better than consult Mr. Wheatley's pages; they will acquire a due appreciation of the importance of their task, will derive many valuable suggestions in the performance of it, and will generally gain enlightenment and instructive reading. The importance of indexing has never, we are afraid, been sufficiently recognised until recent years; but, as we have frequently pointed out in these pages, no work of any importance should be published without such an adjunct.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'The Poor Minister's Dream, or the Muzzled Ox,' by Stanley Frazer. Gloomy indeed is the picture here presented of the present condition and future prospects of Baptist ministers in some country places, and its effect is heightened by quotations from the letters of ministers and their wives, one of which contains a statement showing an income of £94 and an expenditure of £104 per annum. This does not seem an excessive outlay for a minister with a wife and family, every item of whose disbursements is put before the reader. Nevertheless, when expenditure exceeds income, 'the result is,' in Mr. Micawber's words, 'misery.' With a view to remedy so regrettable a state of affairs, the suggestion is made to institute a permanent fund, to be called the Helping Fund, particulars of which will be found in the booklet before us, which merits the attention of those to whom it appeals.

From the same.—'Popular Stories, Vol. XII.: Fetters of Gold,' by W. S. Metcalfe. A story of two brothers, Ronald and Richard Lisle. The former is a successful and wealthy merchant, while the latter has failed in business. Richard is a martyr to gout, and his wife suffers from chest affection. This makes their poverty the more difficult to bear. Ronald and Richard had loved the same girl, but Richard was the favoured lover and Ronald henceforward harboured a revengeful feeling towards his brother. As his parents are so ill and there is little food and no coal in the house, Dick, who has been discharged by his employer to reduce business expenses, resolves to ask his uncle Ronald for assistance; but his uncle declines to do anything and orders him out. On his way home he offers to hold a cab horse while the cabman carries his fare's luggage into a house. The fare, a rich Australian, struck by his appearance, questions him, and on learning the distressed condition of the family gives Dick half-a-sovereign. Needless to say that coal and other necessities are speedily procured. Meanwhile Roland's heart has been touched by a sermon on Dives and Lazarus, and he calls on his brother to inquire what he can do for him. To which Richard replies 'Nothing;' and then tells Roland that Mr. Bird, the rich Australian, has just brought him news of a legacy of £350,000 left him by a Mr. Thirtle, formerly one of Ronald's clerks who had been suspected of dishonesty, but whose innocence was proved by Richard Lisle, who paid for his outfit and passage to Australia. There Thirtle had realised a fortune at the gold fields, and, dying, had left it to his benefactor. What are the consequences to Richard Lisle of this sudden change of circumstances will be found related in this tale of no ordinary interest, but unfortunately marred by so much slipshod English as fully to justify Mr. Andrew Lang in asking, 'Where is the printer's reader?'

From Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'The Star Sapphire,' by Mabel Collins (Mrs. Cook). This, we believe, is a new edition of a novel that has deservedly won popularity; but why have the publishers issued it as a new book? Have critics such short memories as all that?

From the same.—'The Inconsequences of Sara,' by Danaë May. We see from the advertisements that Miss May has been compared with Mr. Anthony Hope and John Oliver Hobbes. It seems to us that her talent is more akin to that of Mr. G. S. Street; she has the same delicate but firm touch, and the same gift for exposing the snobbery of the wealthy middle-classes. Indeed, her Brookes family is very similar to Mr. Street's memorable Bantocks, and if Miss May's book had appeared two or three years ago we should have welcomed it even more heartily than we do now. Sara is drawn with real power; she is a type becoming very common in these selfish and degenerate days. Her quotations from Marcus Aurelius are delicious. If Miss May continues to write her clever dialogue she should very soon find her public, and that public should be by no means a small one.

From MM. Velhagen & Klasing, Bielefeld and Leipzig, Zeitschrift für Bücherfreunde. Sechster Jahrgang, 1902-3, Heft 1, April. In an 'Address to Our Readers' prefixed to the part before us the editor, Herr Fedor von Zobeltitz, gives an interesting sketch of the five years' existence of this beautifully produced Periodical for Book-lovers which he so ably edits, and the founding of which by its enterprising publishers was surrounded by so many difficulties and entailed so large an outlay. He tells us there were very few book-lovers in Germany five years ago; and that with 'Bibliophilie' people scarcely associated any other idea than that of the passion for collecting books which was known here long ago as Bibliomania. So that the Zeitschrift was a new departure in periodical undertakings. The principal article in this number is that on the British Museum Library, by H. A. L. Degener, Oxford, occupying thirty-eight folio pages and illustrated by twenty interior and exterior views from photographs. It is full of interesting information, and is the outcome of a careful study of the vast collection. In its preparation Mr. Degener has been favoured with the kind assistance of the Museum authorities. There are several other articles, which we regret our inability to enumerate owing to space limits. They contain many illustrations.

From Messrs. Rowland Ward, Limited.—

'A Sporting Trip through Abyssinia: a Narrative of a Nine Months' Journey from the Plains of the Hawash to the Snows of Simien, with a description of the Game, from Elephant to Ixob, and Notes on the Manners and Customs of the Natives,' by P. H. G. Powell-Cotton, F.Z.S., F.R.G.S. This is a work that will raise much envy, we fear, in the minds of ardent brother sportsmen, who would dearly like to have shared in the congenial experiences that the author enjoyed; and the fact that Mr. Cotton gives a number of 'Hints to Sportsmen' in one of the appendices with which the book is supplied will afford them but cold comfort, we are afraid. The author, in short, seems to have had a remarkably good time of it, and much of the flavour of this he is fortunately capable of passing across his pages. The account of his trip commences with his departure from London, but the real interest of the narrative begins when he separates himself from the expedition organised by Mr. J. J. Harrison, to go from the Somali coast across the north of Lake Rudolph, and through the unexplored country between the point where the Omo runs into that lake and Fashoda, and strikes out on his own account. To detail all the varieties of sport he meets with during his journey through the territory of the Emperor Menelik would be impossible in the space at our command. It must be enough to say that the account is deeply interesting, and abounds in many incidents of novelty. The references to the manners and customs of the natives will no doubt be found valuable by anthropologists. The volume is very handsomely 'got up,' and the illustrations are certainly not the least of its many attractions.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'The Solicitor's Clerk,' by Charles Jones. This is a new, enlarged, and revised edition of a very popular handbook which has already established itself as excellent in every way.

NEW EDITIONS.—Mr. Edward Arnold has issued a new and revised edition of Mr. E. T. Cook's well-balanced book on the 'Rights and Wrongs of the Transvaal War.' Opportunity has been taken to strengthen several of the arguments by fresh pieces of evidence, and the process of bringing the book up to date has involved some re-arrangement of the latter portion, four additional chapters being now included. These deal with conditions of settlement in relation to the Kitchener-Botha and other negotiations.—We are glad to see that Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have felt justified in publishing a second edition of Mr. A. G. Bradley's interesting work on 'The Fight with France for North America.' It is an admirable book, written with sound judgment, and a due regard to historical accuracy. The author never allows his sympathies to warp his sense of justice, and though his book has all the movement and picturesqueness of a novel, this is never effected at the expense of truth.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimètres.

Kit Kennedy

BY

S. R. CROCKETT.

'It is a story which gives much pleasure in the reading.'—PALL MALL GAZETTE.
'The end of the book is as satisfactory as it is dramatic and unexpected, and none will put "Kit Kennedy" down without feeling that they have handled a literary masterpiece.'
LLOYD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.
'A reader who once becomes interested in it is sure of being entertained until the end.'
SCOTSMAN.

TWENTY-THIRD THOUSAND.

Through Science to Faith

BY

DR. NEWMAN SMYTH,

Author of 'The Place of Death in Evolution,' 'Old Faiths in New Lights,' 'The Reality of Faith,' &c.

Large crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top. 6s.

To many persons who are too busy to search for themselves among the strictly scientific sources of knowledge, but who are too thoughtful not to be interested in such inquiries, 'Through Science to Faith' will be a revelation.

'We earnestly commend the book as worthy of its theme, and worthy of the author. It is fitted to be of great service at the present time.'—ABERDEEN DAILY FREE PRESS.

'Dr. Smyth works out his theme with fulness of knowledge and much ingenuity.'

GLASGOW HERALD.

'Dr. Smyth has illustrated afresh the inexhaustible theme of the unity of principle and plan running through the world in a manner that is highly attractive, alike in the interest of knowledge and of faith.'—SCOTSMAN.

'The treatment of the theme now handled gives evidence of wide reading and investigation, and of carefulness in reaching conclusions.'—NEW YORK CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

Debrett's Coronation Guides

GENEALOGICAL CHART OF HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

CERTIFIED BY THE COLLEGE OF ARMS.

(Reproduced from the Chart.)

The PRESTON GUARDIAN says:

'I have seen nothing so excellent in its way as "Debrett's Genealogical Chart of his Majesty King Edward VII," which, with its letterpress account of the Coronation ceremonies and historical notes, is designed to tell the man in the street all that it is essential to know of the great State event of the coming month of June.

'The Chart has been revised and certified correct by Bluemantle, Pursuivant of Arms at the Heralds' College, London, who has also supplied interesting notes. The publication is at once an excellent popular handbook, and a souvenir worthy of being preserved for reference.'

*Price complete, 1s. Paper; or bound in Whole Red Art Vellum,

The QUEEN says:—

'The very name of Debrett carries weight, and this volume comes at a most opportune moment, when a generation who have only heard of a Coronation in England as a ceremony of years ago are eager to learn all there is to be learnt on the subject. People coming to London specially for the occasion will know by its means who the people are who will take part in the great event, what will be done, what has been done in times past, and why.'

Price 2s. 6d.; or with Genealogical Chart, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

In square crown 8vo. handsomely bound in cloth and fully illustrated, price 6s. net.

IN A MINSTER GARDEN.

A Causerie of the Old Time and the New.

By the DEAN OF ELY.

A Charming Succession of Gossiping Chapters.

With many quaint and picturesque Illustrations of the Nooks and Corners of Ely Cathedral and its surroundings.

'A delightful book; contains numerous pleasing illustrations of Ely Minster and garden, and the cover is tastefully designed.'—CHURCH BELLS.

'It is a book to possess and dip into very often, betraying the personality of the writer, and teaching much that is well worth learning of the past—especially that past connected with the old minster.'—BOOKMAN.

'In this volume Dean Stubbs reveals himself as a verse writer of no mean ability.'—GLOBE.

'Succeeds in bringing before us the wealth of historical, legendary, literary, and scenic material connected with Ely.'—DAILY GRAPHIC.

'A book which has infused into it the charm and the calm restfulness of the cathedral close. The Dean gives us an olla podrida of history, poetry, anecdote, and dialogue. There is a mingled flavour of scholarship, music, antiquarianism, and love of nature. Charming illustrations with features of beauty-spots of the cathedral and its surroundings.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

NEW VOLUME OF THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

In foolscap 8vo. cloth, price 4s.; Roxburghe, 7s. 6d.; Large Paper, £1. 1s.

HOW TO MAKE AN INDEX. By HENRY

B. WHEATLEY, Author of 'How to Form a Library,' 'How to Catalogue a Library.'

In the volume the various theories concerning Indexing are set forth, and definite rules are laid down and illustrated for the making of an Index, while erroneous methods are exposed and illustrated by humorous examples.

'We are grateful to Mr. Wheatley for his eloquent treatise. As a practical indexer he has entire grasp of the subject, and fully illustrates the difficulties, pitfalls, and snares which beset one who would attempt an Index Rerum. Some very valuable suggestions are scattered through the work, particularly in the final chapter. Altogether, this should prove a highly acceptable addition to the "Book-Lover's Library."'—BOOK QUEERIES.

The SPECTATOR says:—'This is mainly an account of Professor Drummond's Evangelistic work. There never has been a more sincere Evangelist, and never, we might say, one less bound by conventions. . . . Henry Drummond's Life is admirably described in this volume. Mr. Lennox is as tactful as he is sympathetic. Mr. Lennox's book is a compact and lucid account of a great man and a great work.'

HENRY DRUMMOND:

A Biographical Sketch (with Bibliography).

By CUTHBERT LENNOX.

The EXPOSITORY TIMES says:—'This is no abridgment of Professor Smith's 'Life.' It is what another man's eyes have seen, what another man's memory has stored. To sit down to the first page is to rise up with the last.'

The BIRMINGHAM POST says:—'We have graphic pictures here of the virile professor, teacher, preacher, writer, man of science, and traveller, and Mr. Lennox is to be congratulated upon the ability with which he has drawn them, portraying the man in his several rôles. The sketch is sympathetically, yet, we instinctively feel, truthfully written and we get a clear conception of the true greatness of Drummond and of his achievements.'

PRESS REVIEWS, &c.

'This is a book destined to make its mark. It is a proof that theology is still a living science, and can offer its own special contribution to the thought of the age. . . . Nothing so fresh, so thrilling in interest, so wide in outlook, and so helpful to faith, has come within the range of our reading for many a long day.'

Rev. E. W. SHALDERS, B.A., in SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRONICLE.

'Its freshness and originality are impressive in no ordinary degree. Its ideas enrich the Christian thinking of our time. It supplies or suggests the Christian ideas properly underlying Mr. Benjamin Kidd's "Principles of Western Civilisation." The firmness and vigour of the writing are striking.'

Prof. LAIDLAW, of the United Free Church of Scotland.

DENT'S COUNTY GUIDES.

Of the First Volume of 'DENT'S COUNTY GUIDES' the ATHENEUM wrote: 'Their plan seems to us an excellent one, and should produce a kind of volume decidedly superior to the ordinary run of handbooks. After a wide and practical experience of guide-books for nearly forty years, we have no hesitation in saying that this is the best of its size (350 pp.) that we have as yet seen. It is a book that the general antiquary or lover of nature, as well as the county resident, will delight to have on their shelves.'

The Works of G. J. Whyte Melville.

(AN ÉDITION DE LUXE.)

Edited by the Rt. Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Demy 8vo. gilt tops. 24 vols. £12. 12s. net.

The volumes are printed from new type on handmade paper, specially manufactured for this edition, and handsomely bound in buckram with gilt tops.

Coloured frontispiece on Japanese vellum, and full-page illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, H. M. BROCK, C. E. BROCK, G. H. JALLAND, HARRINGTON BIRD, CECIL ALDEN, E. CALDWELL, FRED ROE, and others.

"When shall I see you again?"

The Standard.—'He made the sporting novel something so entirely different to what it had been, that he must be recognised as the originator of a new species, more elevated, more refined, and more largely imbued with the spirit of modern society.'

Saturday Review.—'What is most rare in writers of this class, Whyte Melville possessed to a considerable degree—namely, the ability to hold the attention of readers, whether they were sportsmen or not.'

The Times.—'The edition has everything to recommend it externally.'

The World.—'An edition more worthy of the novelist has certainly not been issued before.'

Manchester Guardian.—'It is as handsome a volume as one could wish to see.'

The Times.—'Good paper and type and a good serviceable binding.'

The Field.—'Altogether a pleasure to read.'

Pall Mall Gazette.—'A handsomely printed edition.'

Pall Mall Gazette.—'These tasteful buckram volumes are worthy of the man and the matter in them.'

St. James's Gazette.—'These capital books . . . the work of a born storyteller.'

Saturday Review.—'Fulfills every requirement of the book lover in paper, type, illustrations, and binding.'

Athenæum.—'The edition is evidently going to be a success.'

Country Gazette.—'The publishers may be congratulated on the style in which the work is turned out.'

Truth.—'Has every claim to be considered an Édition de Luxe.'

Spectator.—'The pleasant setting of this handsome edition.'

W. THACKER & CO., 2 Creed Lane, London, E.C.

'This edition would make a very suitable Prayer-book for peer or peeress on the appointed day, and it would, at the same time, provide a good deal of miscellaneous reading for the hours of waiting.'—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

The Great Solemnity of the Coronation

By Rev. DOUGLAS MACLEANE, M.A., sometime Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford. Imperial 16mo. gilt edges, 12s. 6d. net.

This new Work, containing the Coronation Service (with Plan), and complete Introductions, Notes, and Appendices on the Rites, Ceremonial, and Usages observed, both now and formerly, at the Inauguration of our Sovereigns, will be of great service to those who are to take part in the Solemnity, to Antiquaries, and also to the Public.

The Cover is a handsome reproduction in leather, tastefully gilt, of a George IV. binding, containing his coat of arms, now in the British Museum. This Binding is fully described in a Note by Mr. CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A.

'Mr. Douglas Macleane's notes on the service show a wide and accurate knowledge of all that pertains historically to this wonderful ceremony, and we can imagine that within the next few months it will be much used as a book of reference.'—MORNING POST.

APPROVED SCHOOL BOOKS by Dr. CORNWELL, F.R.G.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'
EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 89th Edition, 3s. 6d.; or with Thirty Maps, 5s. 6d.

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system.'—ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2s. 6d., or 4s. coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1s.; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1s. 4d. Questions, 6d.

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1s.

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL GRAMMAR. 65th Edition, 2s. red leather; or 1s. 9d. cloth.

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 88th Edition, 1s. cloth; 9d. sewed.
'This simple introduction is as good a book as can be used.'
SPECTATOR.

'The Book is enlarged by a Section on Word-Building, with Exercises for Young Children.'

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1s. 6d. KEY, 3s.

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found invaluable to the intelligent instructor.'—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the Same Time. 4th Edition, 1s.

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4s. 6d.

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.'
LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY to SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4s. 6d.

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1s. 6d. KEY, 4s. 6d.

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and, its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.'
ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

ARITHMETIC FOR BEGINNERS. Combines simplicity and fulness in teaching the First Four Rules and Elementary Fractions. 9th Edition. 1s.

WILLIAM BLACK, NOVELIST By SIR WEMYSS REID.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

'An admirable memoir. Sir Wemyss Reid has made an attractive portrait of this strong, self-contained Scot, a curious blend of poetry, Highland mysticism, and of the practical shrewdness of his nation. . . . A biography which, as a sincere and discriminating tribute to the memory of a friend, is a model of its kind.'

MORNING POST.

'The biography is a delightfully vivid sketch. . . . The book is decidedly one to be read.'

DAILY EXPRESS.

'It appears to me, from my own slight but delightful recollections of William Black, that Sir Wemyss Reid has achieved one of the most perfect biographies in the language.'

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Full of characteristic anecdotes.'

T. P. O'CONNOR in 'M.A.P.'—'He is an entirely new temperament in literature. His imagination is of the best order, whilst his style is intensely individual—short sentences, close-packed with meaning in strong, simple Saxon words.'

DAILY NEWS.—'His style is his own, although in some respects it recalls the method of those two brilliant young journalists, now, alas! dead—G. W. Stevens and Stephen Crane. He has the power of visualising his surroundings which those two writers possessed in such a marked degree, but his work is stronger than that of either of them, and he comes to closer grips with his subject.'

HOLINSHED'S ACCOUNTS OF CORONATIONS OF PREVIOUS EDWARDS OF ENGLAND.

'In London streets, that coronation day.'
—SHAKESPEARE.

In this number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, which was established in the first year of the reign of Queen Victoria of blessed memory, in addition to notes and notices about literature relating to the forthcoming Coronation of our beloved Sovereign King Edward the Seventh, we thought it would be interesting and appropriate to give some account of the crowning of earlier King Edwards.

The quaint old woodcuts and the blackletter extracts here following are copies from Holinshed's 'Chronicles of England,' published in 1577—the work used by Shakespeare in writing his dramatic histories of our kings, in which Royal Edwards so often figure; indeed, we wonder that no one has strung together some of Shakespeare's many references to King Edward's royal namesakes as a Coronation tribute—it would be more acceptable than many of the Odes and Offerings which are doomed to waste their sweetness on the desert air.

How greatly Shakespeare was indebted to Holinshed is well known; the most exhaustive comparison of the writers is that interesting work 'Shakespeare's Holinshed,' by W. G. Boswell-Stone, who thinks that the woodcut portrait of Edward III.

given in Holinshed (see our copy of it) was in Shakespeare's mind when he says:

For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hilts unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.

—HENRY V., Act II.

In Act I., Henry V., the first French Ambassador says to the King:

Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain Dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.

'Edwarde the firste of that name after the Conquest, beganne hys reigne over the Realme of Englande the XV. daye of November in the yere of the world 5239, of our Lorde 1272, of the Saxons 814, after the Conquest 206. . . Thys Edwarde the First when his father dyed beyng aboute the age of XXXV. yeaeres olde, was as then in the holy lande, or rather in his journey homewards.'

EDWARD THE FIRST.
A.D. 1272.

Holinshed gives an interesting account of the young king's journey home; a tournament held in his honour at Chalon, in Burgundy, in which the English combatants beat the French, appears to have developed into a battle in earnest, for 'the Englishmenne beeyng sore provoked, slewe manye of the Frenche footemenne, but bycause they were but raskalles no greate accompte was made of them.'

In this tourney the king took part with great success.

On the king's return to London:

'He was receyved with all joy that might be devised. The streetes were banded wyth riche cloths of silke, arras, and tapestrie, the Aldermen and Burgeses of the city threwe out of theyr wyndows handfulles of golde and silver, to signyfye the greate gladnesse which they had conceived of his safe returne: the Cundits ran plentifully with white wine & red that eeche creature myght drink his fill. Upon the XXX. day of Auguste in this seconde yeaere of hys raygne he was crowned at Westminster together with his wife Quene Elianor, by the hands of Robert Kilwarby, Archbishop of Canterbury.

'At this coronation were present Alexander Kyng of Scottes, and John Earl of Britayn, with their wives that were sisters to Kyng Edward.

'The Kyng of Scots did homage unto Kyng Edward for the Realme of Scotland, in lyke maner as other Kyngs of Scotlande before hym had done to other Kyngs of England ancestours to this Kyng Edwarde.

'At the solemnyntie of this coronation there were let goe at libertie, catche them that catche them myght, five hundred great horses by the Kyng of Scottes, the Erles of Cornwall, Gloucester, Pembroke, Warren & others, as they were alighte beside theyr backs.

'On Saint Nicholas even there chaunced such an earthquake with lightning and thunder, and therewythall the appearing of the brenning drake,* and a blazing starre called a comete, that the people were brought into no small feare upon consideration thereof. But nowe to the poynte of the historie.

'About the 22. of Januarie, the King sailed over into France, & at Bulleigne in Picardie on ye 24 day of Januarie, he did homage to ye French K. for his lands of Gascoigne and Pontiew, & on ye morrow after, married Isabell ye French King's daughter, & on ye 7. of February, he returned with hir into England, and coming to London, was joyfully received of the Citizens, and on the five and twentieth day of February, beyng Shrove Sunday in the leape yeaere, they were solemnely Crowned by the Byshoppe of Winchester, bycause that Robert the Archbishop of Canterbury was not as then within the Realme.

* Burning Dragon.

'After thys King Edwarde (the First) wente forwarde to see the mountayne countreys of Scotlande, the Bysshoppe of Durham ever keeping a dayes journey afore hym. At length, when hee hadde passed through Murrey lande, and was come to Elghin, perceyving all thynges to be in quiet, hee returned towards Berwicke, and commyng to the Abbey of Scone, he tooke from thence the marble stone, whereuppon, the Kinges of Scotlande were accustomed to sitte as in a chayre, at the tyme of their Coronation, whyche King Edwarde caused nowe to be transferred to Westminster, and there placed, to serve for a Chayre, for the Priest to sit in at the Altar.'

EDWARD THE SECOND.
A.D. 1307.

'There was such prease and throng of people at this Coronation, that a knight called Sir John Bakewell alias Blackwell, was thrust & smothered to death.'

Speed says that at this Coronation the king greatly offended the Lords by allowing his favourite Peirs de Gaveston to carry the crown of St. Edward 'in that pompe.'

EDWARD THE THIRD.
A.D. 1327.

'He was crowned at Westminster on the day of the Purification of our Ladie next ensuing (Feb. 2. 1327) by the hands of Walter the Archbishop of Canterbury. And because he was but 14 yerres of age, so that to governe of himselfe he was not sufficient, it was decreed that xii of the greatest lordes within the realme shoulde have the rule and government till he came to more perfite yeares.'

'The morrow next ensuing, being the fourth of March (1641), he rode to the Church of Saint Paule, and there offered: and after Te Deum song, with greatesolemnitie hee was conveyd to Westminster, and there set in the hall, with the Scepter royal in his hand, where to all the people there in great number assembled, his title and clayme to the Crowne of England, was declared. . . . This agreement then being thus concluded, he entered into Westminster Church under a Canapie, with solemn procession, and there as King offered and herewith, taking the homages of all the nobles there present, hee returned by water to the Bishops Palais and on the morrow after, he was proclaymed R. by the name of Edwarde the fourth, throughout the citie.

Holinshed merely mentions that King Edward the Fourth was 'with all solemnitie crowned and annointed King.'

Speed says that after the bloody fight at Towton, in which in all thirty-five thousand ninety and one were slain ('for all being English, acquit themselves English-like, no taking of prisoners'):

'Victorious Edward, in triumph returned to London, and the eight and twentieth of June with great solemnity was crowned at Westminster, where in S. Peter's Church, the next day it was againe most solemnly set on his head, and the third day so crowned, he came to Saint Pauls in London, and therein was censured with great applause of the People.'

The Duke of Gloucester prevented the Coronation of Edward the Fifth, he intending it for his own head.

'The same tyme great preparation was made for the Kinges Coronation, and so the foure and twentieth of February next ensewing, his majestie came from the Tower, and so rode throughe London unto Westminster, with as greatesoyaltie, as myght be, the streetes beyng boong, and Pageantes in dyvers places erected, to testifys the good willes of the Citizens, rejoycing that it had pleased God to deale so favourably with the Englishe nation to graunt them suche a towardly yong Prince to their King and Sovereigne thus to succede in place of his noble father.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued two excellent portraits in colour of his Majesty King Edward VII. and her Majesty Queen Alexandra. The portraits, which have been reproduced from oil paintings by the well-known artist, Mr. W. H. Margetson, can be had either printed on plate paper (size twenty inches by fourteen) or mounted on cardboard. In the latter shape they are particularly suitable for hanging on school walls. Messrs. Cassell have long possessed a reputation for colour printing, but they have rarely done anything better than their latest work, the Queen being especially good.

Their Majesties the King and Queen and H.R.H. the Princess of Wales have graciously accepted copies of the Coronation Hymn (words by A. W. Letts, music by the Rev. A. Wellesley Batson, Mus. Bac. Oxon.). Published by Partridge & Cooper, Ltd., Fleet Street, E.C.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept from Mr. Charles W. Smith a copy of his latest work, 'The South African War and the "Bear" Operator.'

The June number of the House, the Journal of Home Arts and Crafts, will contain a special article on 'Illuminations and Decorations for the Coronation.'

His Majesty the King has been pleased to accept a copy of Stancliffe's little book of hints to players of the royal game of golf, which Messrs. Methuen have just published, under the title of 'Golf Do's and Don'ts.'

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has been pleased to accept a copy of Mr. J. Byers Maxwell's novel, 'A Passion for Gold: the Story of a South African Mine,' issued by Messrs. Treherne & Co.

'The Building of Coronation Bonfires' is the title of an article by Mr. A. W. Rumney in the June number of the Country. We envy those who will witness the bonfires in the Lake District: nowhere else can they be seen with such effect.

With the Academy and Literature of June 7 will be issued a Guide and Travel Book Supplement, which will deal with the current Literature of Topography and Travel (Home and Foreign), and direct attention to the scope and special feature of each work reviewed.

Mr. Geo. Washington Moon thinks that the present wording of our National Anthem is 'A National Disgrace,' because it does not always rhyme, and for other reasons; for instance, he points out that in order to comply with the laws of rhyme the last verse ought to be sung thus:

May he defend our laws,
And ever give us cause
To sing with heart and jaus (!)
God save the King.

Mr. Moon adds: 'To those Exalted Personages to whom has been entrusted the high honour of arranging the Programme of the Coronation Service, the following Anthem is respectfully offered as a substitute for the preceding doggerel.'

A CORONATION ANTHEM.
(To the old National Tune.)

O Thou Eternal One,
Gracious, Supernal One,
Reigning alone
In Heaven's dazzling light,— Let Thy benignant might
And Thy love infinite Compass our Throne.

World-wide the realms we've won:
On them ne'er sets the sun;
And we would bring,
From millions far and nigh,
Unto Thyself, Most High,
This great impassioned cry,—
'God bless our King!'

Bless him with life and love:
Life that will soar above,
And love like Thine.
True hearts before him bow;
Oh! may his kingly brow,
Radiant with splendour now,
Be Thine Own shrine!

Bless, too, our gracious Queen;
From sorrow's storm-clouds screen
Her with Thy wing.
Grant to her joyous days;
Love she with love repays,
And, with us all, she prays,— 'God bless the King!'

Hove, Sussex.

We have not heard whether Exalted Personages have adopted Mr. Moon's new version; it is just possible that the rhyme of the National Anthem may not be strictly O.K. But can the leopard change its spots? No. Nor the National Anthem its blots—if it has any, they are consecrated by the voices of millions who have been, are, and will be—quite content with the old song. We might as well try to change the National Flag as the National Anthem.

The Brainworkers' Association held its first public meeting at Carnegie Hall on Sunday evening, May 11. Julia Ward Howe, the guest of honour, recited the 'Battle Hymn of the Republic,' and also spoke on 'The Ethical Office of the Drama.' Edwin Markham, the president of the association, read a poem, and also delivered an address on 'The Power of the Ideal.' The Brainworkers' Association is an organisation whose object is the development of the best that thought can produce—in art, letters, the drama, religion, and every activity of life. Its aim is co-operation, and its activities will be carried out through a fund which will be available when necessary to supplement genius. No branch of brainwork will be neglected. —Publishers' Weekly.

Messrs. James Blackwood & Co. announce 'The Corona of Royalty from the Anglo-Saxon Period to the Present Time: a Handbook of Coronation,' with illustrations by Laura Bennett and Emily Dorman.

The June number of the Nineteenth Century and After will contain an article on 'Some Bygone Coronation Progresses,' by E. S. Hope, C.B., and a 'Letter from an Eye-witness of George IV.'s Coronation' (in 1820).

The King's gardens at Windsor, Frogmore, Sandringham, Osborne, and Balmoral will be fully described and profusely illustrated in the Gardeners' Magazine of June 14.

Messrs. James Finch & Co., Ltd., of 33 Paternoster Row, inform us that the admirable cloth binding of their issue of Green's 'Short History of the English People' (done by arrangement with Messrs. Macmillan) has been specially done for the Coronation, the design embodying the Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle. This edition ought to have a very large sale.

Messrs. Leach & Son, printers, New Quay, Wisbech, can supply a leaflet at 1s. per 100 with a 'Coronation Hymn' of which we give the first verse:

Tune..... 'O King of Kings.' Sullivan.

O Thou, by Whom all monarchs reign,
Receive our supplication,
And pour Thy grace like showers of rain
Upon our King and Nation:
On him who on this day is crowned
With solemn pomp and blessing,
That he may through his life be found Thy Holy Name confessing.

Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd., announce the publication, on June 9, of their 'Coronation Book,' by the Rev. Jocelyn H. T. Perkins, M.A., Sacrist of Westminster Abbey, which for fulness and accuracy of detail will probably take a foremost place among the many volumes on the same subject which are being published. Mr. Perkins's official connection with the Abbey has placed him in a particularly advantageous position for obtaining information on the details of past Coronations such as is not within the reach of every writer, and he has availed himself to the full of his opportunities in carrying out his design of conveying to his readers as vivid an impression as possible of the splendid ceremonial which once surrounded the 'Sacring' of our English monarchs, and of those portions of it which remain to-day. Some of the subjects dealt with are: The Regalia of England and Scotland; the Coronation Chair; the Ceremonial Vestments; the Officers, Ecclesiastical and Lay, taking Purey-Cust, D.D., Dean of York, a neat little volume, handsomely bound in cloth, giving an interesting historical résumé of the Coronations of past Kings and Queens of England, from William the Conqueror to her late Majesty, with an account of the origin of many of the customs, both ancient and modern, observed in connection with the ceremony.

Two other books appropriate to a season of national rejoicing, to be published within the next few days by Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd., are 'Songs of England's Glory,' a collection of ballads and poems relating to the noblest episodes of our national history, beginning with early ballads and coming down to Sir Edwin Arnold's verses on the death of Cecil Rhodes, and 'Southey's Life of followed by blank spaces for personal impressions. General information useful for visitors to London is given in alphabetical order. The book is also provided with sketching paper and a plan of the route of the Coronation Procession, as well as a railway accident insurance for £100.

The Navy League has in preparation a Guide to the Coronation Naval Review, containing, among other articles, contributions by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Admiral the Hon. Sir Edmund R. Fremantle, G.C.B., C.M.G., the Right Hon. Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M.P., Mr. Frank T. Bullen, Mr. Harold Begbie, Mr. Julian Corbett, Comr. the Hon. Henry N. Shore, R.N., Mr. Archibald S. The volume is profusely illustrated from old and in many cases rare MSS. and prints, and handsomely bound in richly decorated cloth cover, making it eminently suitable, in addition to its value as a compendious work of reference, for a gift or prize book during the present eventful year.

Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd., are also publishing very shortly 'The Crowning of Monarchs,' by the Very Rev. A. P.

The Bishop of Ripon will contribute 'A Coronation Sermon' to the June number of the Quiver, which will also contain 'A Coronation Hymn' by Mr. A. C. Benson, set to music by Dr. Harford Lloyd, and a children's Coronation hymn from the pen of Mr. Albert Midlane, author of 'There's a Friend for Little Children.'

'The Legend of the Coronation Stone,' by Rev. Rosslyn Bruce, is the title of an article in the June number of the Antiquary, which also contains articles on: 'Discoveries of Fossil Bones in the Lower Thames Valley,' by Rev. B. Hale Wortham; also papers on 'Minster Church,' by H. P. Feasey; 'Folk Tales from the Indus Valley,' by E. W. Brabrook; 'The Fortunes of Cyrene,' by W. B. Wallace.

The English Illustrated Magazine for June opens with an important paper by Mr. C. Welch, F.S.A., the well-known Librarian of the Guildhall, upon the part which the City has played in various past Coronations. The illustrations are from various engravings and documents dating from the days of King Edward VI. to that of the late Queen.

In connection with the Coronation and the Naval Review, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will shortly issue an Surveyor of the King's Pictures and Director of the National Portrait Gallery; Mr. Richard R. Holmes, C.V.O., his Majesty's Librarian at Windsor Castle; and Mr. Guy Francis Laking, M.V.O., Keeper of the King's Armoury and of the Armour in the Wallace Collection. The frontispiece to the number will be an original etching of the Choir of Westminster Abbey, by Mr. Axel Hermann Haig, R.E.

DEATH OF A PUBLISHER WHO WAS ALSO HIS MAJESTY'S UNICORN PURSUIVANT FOR SCOTLAND.

There passed away at his residence, South Bush House, Musselburgh, after a few months' illness, Mr. Stuart Moodie Livingstone, his Majesty's Unicorn Pursuivant for Scotland. Last summer while at Rothesay Mr. Livingstone sustained a painful accident by a fall, and failed in health ever since. His was an interesting personality, and his circle of acquaintanceship was a wide one. Unfailing geniality and consideration for others less prospered in the bestowal of this world's goods endeared him to very many. Born in Edinburgh something over sixty years ago, he was educated at the Royal High School, and was trained to the printing and publishing business. In his early years he had large experience in the handling of manuscript, and acquired a sound and discriminating faculty which in later years he applied with much success as a publisher. Joining his brother, Mr. Edward Livingstone, he founded the well-known firm of Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, medical publishers and printers, Teviot Place, Edinburgh. Many medical practitioners of the present day will doubtless recall the back room of the shop where, in their student days, unable from financial considerations to acquire the costly and valuable medical works, they were indebted to the kindness of the deceased and his still surviving brother for leave to study the volumes. Mr. Livingstone continued to retain an interest in the business up till Christmas last. It was, however, in another connection that he came chiefly before the public—namely, his holding of the honourable office of his Majesty's Unicorn Pursuivant for Scotland. Till laid aside by illness, it was his boast that he had never missed being present at a single royal proclamation in Edinburgh for forty-two years. Against the counsel of his friends, he braved the wild weather to take part in the proclamation of the accession of his Majesty King Edward. This was his last public appearance, though he had fondly hoped to be spared to proclaim the crowning of the King. He was the 'father' of the Scottish heralds. During his tenure of office Mr. Livingstone attended innumerable func-

Letters to the Editor

DUTCH EDITIONS OF MR. W. CLARK RUSSELL'S SEA NOVELS.

[Seeing our note about a German translation of his 'Sea Queen,' Mr. W. Clark Russell sends us a letter he has received from a Dutch admirer which shows that three of his best stories have been translated into Dutch. — Ed. P.C.]

DEAR SIR,—Perhaps you did not know that three of your novels have been translated into Dutch. Neither did I, but last week I got a catalogue, and then I saw your name. I could not omit buying one of them to know how the translator had done the work.

The title of the first book (two volumes of 370 pages each) is 'Een Zonderlinge Zeereis,' the literal translation of 'A Strange Voyage.'

The title of the second book (also two volumes) is 'Le Brind van een Zeeman' (the bride of a sailor), a translation of 'A Sailor's Sweetheart.' The third (two volumes) is 'How Jack Courted,' in Dutch 'Hoe Jack zijn hof Maakte,' but I do not know the title of your work.

It is a free translation, but the translator does not mention his name, and the works were published by De Erven Loosjes at Haarlem, near Amsterdam, a firm that does not exist any longer, but sold its publications to D. Bolle, Hang, Rotterdam.

I bought 'A Strange Voyage,' and as I have a copy of it in English I compared some parts of it.

Now, it is a free translation; yet I am convinced that the translator is or has been at sea, for all your sea terms are rendered into real Dutch sea terms.

When you insist upon seeing the Dutch child of your pen I shall buy another copy of it and send it you.

I hope I have not disturbed you by writing this, but I was so glad, when I saw that there are more Dutchmen who like your novels, that I resolved to give you the news; perhaps it is no news at all for you.

Hoping that this letter may reach you in good health, I remain, dear sir,

Most respectfully yours,
L. KARREMAN.

Re PROPOSED NATIONAL BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—The widespread desire, expressed in a variety of ways, both by booksellers and assistants, for an organisation—or 'Union'—by which relief can be given to necessitous assistants, and to the widows and orphans of those members of our trade whose fate is to 'fall by the wayside,' and who from inability or other circumstances have failed to make provision against the proverbial 'rainy day,' has led to an effort being made to form a Booksellers' Provident Society.

It has been decided to call a preliminary meeting of booksellers and assistants for Saturday, June 7, at 3 P.M., to be held at the City Hotel, Long Millgate, the proprietor of which has generously granted the use of a room for the occasion, and Abel Heywood, Esq., has kindly consented to preside.

Mr. H. R. Brabrook, of Glasgow, to whom the credit is due of focussing and elaborating the want, by his letter which appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of March 1st ult., will attend and give an outline of his scheme, and will submit the following resolution to the meeting:—

'That this meeting is of opinion that it is desirable that a Provident Fund should be inaugurated—open to all members of the book trade—both employers and employed, throughout the United Kingdom: that a provisional Committee be formed to draw up a set of Rules to meet the necessities of the case; and that the minimum subscription be 5s. per annum.'

It will be further proposed:

'That on as early a day as possible the said Rules shall be submitted to a general representative meeting to be called either in London, Birmingham, Liverpool, or some other central situation.'

It is most earnestly desired that all who can possibly attend this preliminary meeting will do so even at the cost of a little personal inconvenience, and support by their presence and advice a scheme pregnant with beneficial results to all concerned in bookselling.

Employers are especially asked to lay this notice before their assistants, and grant them facilities for being present.

Yours faithfully,

NOTICE RE GIBBONS & PARRY.

SIR,—Will you kindly insert this notice for the benefit of the wholesale houses who have the names of Gibbons & Parry still on their books? Over fifty firms still persist in sending three circulars where one is more than sufficient.

Twelve months ago I purchased the businesses and subscription libraries of Messrs. Gibbons, Ranelagh Street, and Parry's Library, Renshaw Street, Liverpool.

Yours faithfully,

CURIOUS REQUESTS FOR BOOKS.

DEAR SIR,—May I add to your curious requests for books two which have come under my notice? A school boy came in and asked for 'What you Wish to Do.' On being questioned he said it was by Shakespeare, and was the text-book for the Junior Cambridge Local Examination. It took but a short time to find he wanted, 'As you Like It.' A Frenchman asked for Saal Deek's works. After a little thought he was shown the bookshelf with Charles Dickens's works, and the guess was right.

On the other hand a very young assistant sold a copy of Mark Twain's 'New Pilgrims' Progress' to a youth who came for Bunyan's; and when a written order was handed in for 'A Duet with an Occasional Chorus' he wrote a regret that the piece of music was not in stock.

Yours, &c.,
COLONIAL BOOKSELLER.

THE 'QUARTERLY REVIEW' AND MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS.

'The depreciation of Mr. Stephen Phillips' poetry in the Quarterly Review, and Mr. Colvin's citation of parallel passages from this and other criticisms of Mr. Phillips, that have appeared elsewhere, have brought once more into discussion the question of the "multiple reviewer." It is a question on which not all reviewers can be expected to see eye to eye with the authors and the public. And there are, in fact, a few points to be urged in defence at least of the practice, as all people practically acquainted with the matter are aware. Nevertheless, the public is substantially right in thinking that the sound principle is one man one review, especially when the judgment is in condemnation; and that it is better that no critic, however clever, should be "like Cerberus, three gentlemen at once," barking in three different organs of criticism. Mr. Colvin, I observe, has made it a point against the Quarterly reviewer that he had quarried from old articles of his own in the Saturday Review and the Athenaeum, repeating phrases and paragraphs that he had employed before. That, however, as Mr. Colvin remarks, is a point for the editor of these various periodicals, nor can we see any great objection to the practice. If a writer believes he has made a point of criticism as neatly as he can make it in a comparatively ephemeral article, he is wise to repeat it when he comes to compose his more permanent essay, and not to have recourse to a paraphrase for the mere purpose of avoiding the repetition. At all events this particular objection is inconsistent with Mr. Colvin's main protest. For in the face of these considerable repetitions the critic must be acquitted of all design to conceal the identity of the author of the several criticisms. For whosoever detection the repetition might escape, it would never escape the eye of the author. This open quotation from himself was about the next best thing to signing the article.'—W. P. JAMES in the St. James's Gazette.

Coronation Literature

THE CORONATION BOOK OF EDWARD VII., KING OF ALL THE BRITAINS AND EMPEROR OF INDIA, by W. J. Loftie, B.A., F.S.A. Part I. London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne: Cassell & Co., Ltd., 1902.

The advent of this serial has been heralded by a considerable blowing of trumpets, but not to a greater extent than its merits warrant. A more exquisitely produced work it would be difficult to conceive, and if the remaining issues approach anywhere near the excellence of the first part, its attractions as a complete volume should be irresistible. The object of the publishers, as they put forth in their prospectus, is to present this Coronation Book in a form and style that will not only be worthy of the occasion, but will make it at once 'a splendid work of art and a permanent treasure-house of historical lore,' and right well have they started on their venture. Mr. Loftie's part in the enterprise, of which one chapter is given in the first number, treating in a highly interesting and scholarly manner of 'Crowns and Thrones,' it need hardly be said, bearing in mind his reputation as an archaeologist and historian, is performed with finish and accuracy; but even his work is overshadowed by the exceeding beauty of the illustrations and colour printing. Portions of the work have been produced in gold and silver, and the general effect is most striking. There are also illuminated borderings, head and tail pieces, and a great variety of other original designs. The coloured plates of the number represent his Majesty King Edward VII. (Frontispiece), Richard II. presented to the Virgin Mary (from the Diptych in the possession of the Earl of Pembroke), the frontispiece to Philippe de Mezieres' Book presented to Richard II. (from the MS. in the British Museum), and the Coronation of Henry IV. in Westminster Abbey (from the Froissart MS. in the British Museum). With our appetite whetted by this opening issue we shall await the publication of the other five parts with extreme interest.

THE CORONATION NONSENSE BOOK (in the style of the old 'Book of Nonsense,' by the late Edward Lear), by the poet and painter of 'Clara in Blunderland.' London: William Heinemann. 1902.

As may be imagined, political satire largely preponderates in this little work, but there are also amusing allusions to other matters. We miss, however, the piquant humour that distinguished 'Clara in Blunderland,' though occasionally there are glimpses of it; and the work generally conveys an impression of insufficient preparation and forced hilarity. The artist is clearly at his best when dealing with parliamentary topics.

A FOREIGN VIEW OF ENGLAND IN THE REIGNS OF GEORGE I. AND GEORGE II.: the Letters of Monsieur César de Saussure to his Family, translated and edited by Madame Van Muyden. London: John Murray, 1902.

This is an extremely readable volume, deriving most of its interest from the fact that it records the impression of this country formed by a highly-educated Frenchman during his stay here in 1725-29. Some of his comments early part of the eighteenth century, but who shall say that some of its force does not remain true to the present day? Of the beauty of Englishwomen M. de Saussure speaks in terms of warm admiration, more especially those living in the country; the Court ladies did not so greatly attract him. He was present at the Coronation of King George II., and his description of the scene is certain to be read with great interest. He rather amusingly terms the procession 'a solemn march'—a title that somehow conveys the impression of a funeral—and he enumerates in order the different personages taking part in it, with here and there a note regarding their dress. The Dowager Duchess of Marlborough it seems (the procession for a time being brought to a standstill) took a drum from a drummer and seated herself on it, and the spectacle of the old lady in her robes of state in this undignified position caused roars of laughter among the crowd. What appears to have particularly impressed our visitor was the magnificence of the jewels. 'The peeresses were covered with them and wore them in great quantities on the front of their bodices, in their hair, as clasps for fastening their robes and cloaks, without counting their necklaces, earrings, and rings.' The subsequent banquet in Westminster was a very sumptuous affair, and mention is made of the entrance at its conclusion of the King's Champion, who, attired in ancient armour, and mounted on a similarly protected, richly caparisoned steed, rode into the Hall, and through the Herald-at-Arms challenged any would-be detractor of the King to mortal combat. It is needless to say that no one replied to this defiance, and his Majesty and his champion then exchanged healths out of a golden goblet which the heroic gentleman kept for his pains. M. de Saussure's volume is full of equally entertaining remarks concerning the sights of London, the manners and customs of the English people, their more prominent characteristics, pleasures and pastimes, sports, &c., and the narration

MY VISIT TO THE METROPOLIS OF THE WORLD DURING THE CORONATION YEAR OF HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode.

This little guide book, containing well-executed photographic illustrations of all the chief places and objects of interest in London, with short descriptions of each, is prepared on rather a unique plan, since at the end of each description space is left for the owner to record on national characteristics are remarkably shrewd and quick-witted, but in others he seems to strike a little wide of the mark. 'I do not think,' he writes, 'there is a people more prejudiced in its own favour than the British people, and they allow this to appear in their talk and manners. They look on foreigners in general with contempt, and think nothing is as well done elsewhere as in their own country; and certainly many things contribute to keep up this good opinion of themselves, their love for their nation, its wealth, plenty and liberty, and the comforts that are enjoyed.' This criticism, it should be remembered, was penned in the the impressions made upon him by the visit. In similar manner several pages are left blank for notes on the Coronation pageant, and if he be artistically gifted, opportunity is afforded him, on specially prepared drawing paper at the end, of exercising his talents in this direction. Information is also included respecting the various art galleries, churches, restaurants, theatres, &c., and there is a carefully compiled list of cab fares. A lead pencil in a loop at the back adds to the practical utility of the production, while a very neat binding with writers. Of these indefatigable investigators Mr. Jones is one of the most prominent. Between the covers of his closely-printed volume of over five hundred pages he has collected an amount of material relating to the Coronation ceremonies and the gorgeous paraphernalia by which they are accompanied that is well-nigh exhaustive. He has been careful also to avoid the purely antiquarian side of his subject and to make his book bright and readable. Opening with a chapter on 'Ancient Crowns,' he next proceeds in successive order to treat of 'The reader may gather some idea of its great breadth and far-reaching treatment, but the charms of the volume can only be thoroughly realised by those who explore it for themselves. Mr. Jones is evidently of the opinion of Carlyle and sees in ceremonial forms a deep religious significance. As landmarks of history they have had, he points out, a material influence on the destinies of mankind. Before quitting the volume we should not omit to make mention of the numerous illustrations which give force and additional attraction to the text.

CROWNS AND CORONATIONS: a History of Regalia, by William Jones, F.S.A. A new edition with ninety-one illustrations. London: Chatto & Windus, 1902.

In looking over the numerous volumes of Coronation literature that have been sent for our notice, it is impossible not to be struck by the extreme diligence and painstaking research for the most part displayed by their

Crowns of England,' 'The Regalia of England and Scotland,' 'The Coronation Chair and the Kingston Stone,' 'The Court of Claims,' 'Coronation Processions from the Tower,' 'Coronation of English Sovereigns,' 'The Coronation Oath,' 'The Anointing,' 'Omens and Incidents at Coronations,' and 'Crowns and Coronations in Various Ages and Countries,' while he disposes of the loose ends of his subject, if we may so term them, in a concluding chapter which he entitles 'Fragmenta Regalia.' From this bare enumeration of the heads of his discourse the

THE KING'S RACEHORSES: a History of the Connection of His Majesty King Edward VII. with the National Sport, by Edward Spencer. With additional Notes by Lord Marcus Beresford. Illustrated with twenty plates in photogravure. London: John Long, 1902.

The object of this work is to give an account of the King's racing career from the commencement, and of the various events connected with the Turf in which his Majesty has prominently figured. Mr. Spencer, the author, is well known as a sporting littérateur, and has done his utmost to make the history thoroughly accurate and complete, in this respect being assisted by an authority in Lord Marcus Beresford, who has revised the proof-sheets and added several notes. The volume is divided into six chapters, respectively treating of 'Royalty on the Turf' (a survey of the connection of the monarchs of England, from Henry II. downwards, with the national sport), the racehorses that have from time to time borne the King's colours; the King's luck as traced from the purchase of the mare Perdita, from whom are descended such equine celebrities as Florizel, Persimmon, and Diamond Jubilee; the scene on Epsom Downs when the second-named won the Prince of Wales his first Derby; the Grand National Steeplechase won by Ambush; and his Majesty's connection with Sandringham, the history of that estate and the breeding stud maintained there. There are, as stated above, twenty photogravure plates in the volume, representing the racehorses, jockeys, &c. These have been reproduced from photographs by Mr. Clarence Hailey, of Newmarket. The volume also contains a frontispiece portrait of his Majesty.

'It was on a November morning, sixty years ago, that the bells rang out the joyful news that an heir to the throne was born, and once again in this midsummer sunshine we are all rejoicing that he is crowned our King.' Such are the opening words of this little book, and from them the reader can perceive the joyous spirit that the author brings to his subject. This is still more apparent when he breaks into verse, telling us that

'The land is glad with music, and the joy Of loyal hearts brings brightness everywhere;
Age, full of memories, joins the bounding boy, Eyes weary, smile the loud acclaim to hear.'

We think 'bounding boy' distinctly good, and are much impressed by Mr. Page's poetic efforts generally. Justice, however, compels us to say that the chief attraction of the work lies in the illustrations, which are for the most part very effective.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA, THE NATION'S PRIDE: the Life Story of the Sea King's Daughter, by Mrs. C. N. Williamson. Fully illustrated. London: S. W. Partridge & Co., 8 & 9 Paternoster Row. 1902.

The author supplies a well-written account of a life which is highly interesting without aid from an experienced style. The nine chapters of the volume are devoted to a description of the child Princess, the betrothal, the wedding, early married life, the Queen's illness, convalescence and European travels, the journey to the East, ten eventful years, some glimpses of home life, and later years. Throughout she evinces a warm appreciation of her subject. There are eight illustrations to the volume.

CROWN AND EMPIRE: a Popular Account of the Lives, Public and Domestic, of Edward VII. and Alexandra, with Notes on Some Memorable Coronations, by Alfred E. Knight. Twenty-eight illustrations. Coronation edition. London: S. W. Partridge & Co., 8 and 9 Paternoster Row. 1902.

The author styles this a book of royal way-marks. Its object, he tells us, is to present, in a series of pen-pictures, an all-round sympathetic view of his Majesty in some of the chief circumstances, public and private, of his active and eventful life. The volume is arranged in five sections. The first two treat for the most part of the private life of the King; in the third will be found some account of his work as a friend of social reform and national progress; the fourth supplies a description of his two most memorable tours in foreign lands; while the remaining part is devoted to an account 'largely in the words of persons contemporaneous with the events described,' of the chief Coronation scenes in the world's history, special attention being given to British Coronations. The volume is very capably written, and in the arrangement of his material the author has shown excellent judgment. Of course it is impossible on an occasion like this not to 'enthuse' a little, and if here and there we notice that Mr. Knight is touched with the prevalent malady, we can forgive him much in the fervour of his loyalty. The book is very well illustrated, though in several of the plates we recognise old friends.

PHILIPS' A B C POCKET ATLAS GUIDE TO LONDON. Coronation Year Edition. London: George Philip & Son, Limited.

The principal feature of this little book is a number of coloured maps representing different sections of the Metropolis on the scale of two inches to the mile. There are eighteen of these, and, in addition, six supplementary maps showing the divisions of London into Metropolitan Boroughs, the various railway systems that extend from the Metropolis or are included within its borders, the districts of Kew, Richmond, and Kingston, the whole of the environs of London, and two special plates which illustrate in pictorial form the theatre area and the City of London. At the end is an index to the streets and squares marked on the sectional maps, and this in itself occupies some thirty-four closely printed pages, which will show how fully this part of the work has been carried out. As regards the guide portion, concise information is given concerning all the principal buildings, theatres, monuments, churches, palaces, parks, and other sights of London while in the introductory pages are words of useful advice addressed to the stranger in London. Numerous illustrations accompany the letterpress, and add force to its descriptions.

THE ROLL CALL OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY, by Miss A. Murray Smith (E. T. Bradley), with illustrations and plans. London: Smith, Elder & Co., 1902.

Though this work is not quite ready, yet we have been enabled, through the courtesy of the publishers, to gain some idea of its contents from advanced sheets. The object of the book is to supply a handy guide to the Abbey that, without being so bulky as Dean Stanley's 'Memorials' or the authoress's own 'Annals,' shall yet be more comprehensive and informative than the Deanery Guide. To the last-named publication Mrs. Smith expresses her obligations for the foundation of her volume, but such material as she has availed herself of through this source has undergone a thorough process of revision, many of the names being omitted and others added, while a repetition of the Abbey history has been avoided as far as possible. Some of the chapters have appeared in different periodicals, such as Cornhill, the Pall Mall Magazine, and Lippincott's, but in all these cases the articles have been partly rewritten, and often extensive additions made to their contents. Of the interesting character of the book some idea may be gleaned from the headings of the various chapters, which deal, among other subjects, with 'St. Edward's Interest. Twenty-fourth (Coronation) Edition Illustrated. London, New York, and Melbourne: Ward, Lock & Co., Limited. 1902.

We have frequently in previous numbers testified to the excellence of this guide. The present edition, which has been specially prepared in view of the large number of visitors who will be present in London during the Coronation festivities, appears to transcend all its predecessors. It is truly a wonderful little book, and as closely packed with reliable information as the proverbial barrel of herrings. We have turned with some curiosity to certain portions that we knew from recent occurrences required revision, and in each case have found the information fully brought up to date. The editor of such a work as this inspires our warmest admiration. He must be a Napoleon amongst his kind. A feature of the guide, without which much of its information would be minimised, if not entirely lost, is the lavish manner of its illustration, coupled with the numerous maps and section plans. With this little volume in his hand the stranger in London should have no difficulty in finding his way about, and should be able to display a knowledge of its buildings that would surprise even a native.

HOW AND WHY OUR KING WILL BE CROWNED, by Cecil Hammond, LL.B., with illustrations by Muriel F. L. Hammond. London: Skeffington & Son.

This little pamphlet is, perhaps, not very formidable in appearance, but in proportion to its size it contains a greater variety of information than many more loudly heralded works. The illustrations, too, are numerous, and embrace all the objects with which public curiosity is chiefly concerned. The Rev. Mr. Hammond in his letterpress lightly touches on the reason why we have a Coronation, the date, place, arrangements, officiating clergy, order of service, procession, anthem, recognition, regalia, litany, communion service, oath, anointing, the insignia of royalty, the orb, crown, and so on, contriving within limited space to mention all the essential features of the Coronation ceremony. Portraits of the King and Queen appear in the work, and there is also a plan of Westminster Abbey as arranged for the service, which through the kindness of the publishers we are enabled to reproduce.

HYMNS FOR THE CORONATION OF HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII. Also the National Anthem, with a New and Special Verse. London: Skeffington & Son.

The seven hymns included in this volume have been selected with good judgment, and

Who from Thy Throne on High,' the words of which have a genuine ring of deep feeling. The music is by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, who seems to have caught something of the inspiration of his subject. The additional verse to the National Anthem, which is by Martin S. Skeffington, runs as follows:

'With England's crown to-day
We hail our King, and pray
God save the King.
Guard him in happiness,
Guard him in storm and stress,
Then in Thy Kingdom bless
And crown our King.'

shipping, railways, omnibuses and cabs, old taverns, picture galleries, learned societies, theatres, music-halls, parks—a curious medley, but embracing everything that the mind can possibly think of in connection with our glorious old capital. And throughout he has been ably assisted by Mr. Hanslip Fletcher, whose delineations of familiar buildings and scenes possess a skill and fidelity that add much to the reader's enjoyment of the volume.

in three instances special music has been composed. Perhaps the one that appeals to us most forcibly is the Rev. John A. Warner's 'O God, as it appears to us in the past, in its relationship with royalty, as an ecclesiastical centre, in its official, diplomatic, legal, criminal, and mercan-lence within, which is only, we are sorry to say, imperfectly realised. Possibly the publishers value but slightly the bairn's appreciation of correct colouring, imagining that he prefers pictures approaching more closely his own efforts at painting than the more finished specimens of the art; but in this case we think they forget who are the actual purchasers of the volume. Miss Bridgman has evidently done her best to bring herself in range with the child's mind, but occasionally there are dangerous breaks from the inferior intelligence. We have frequently in these columns awarded Messrs. Dent high praise for their artistic book production, but we are afraid in this instance they have fallen much below par.

H.M. EDWARD VII., THE BRITISH KING, WHOM GOD LONG PRESERVE: a Coronation Souvenir. Printed and published at the Athenæum Press, Taunton, 1902.

Considerable taste has been shown in the production of this little book, and, if the illustrations are rather limited, and the letterpress somewhat scanty, both after their fashion are carefully prepared. Two very good portraits of the King and Queen occupy the centre of the booklet.

THE CROWNING OF OUR KINGS, FROM ETHELRED II. TO EDWARD VII. London: Religious Tract Society, 56 Paternoster Row. 1902.

There is much in this volume that will enlighten the reader in regard to the procedure at £4 10s. 6d.; an old horn comb which was supposed to have belonged to Edward the Confessor, and was used in the early forms of Coronation to smooth the King's hair previous to the anointing, was valued at nothing! Several illustrations descriptive of the various insignia used at the Coronation of George IV.—such as the crown, the curtana, the ampulla, the sceptre, the orb, and so forth—are included in the volume.

T.R.H. THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES, by the Author of 'His Most Gracious Majesty King Edward VII.' With eighty-eight illustrations. London: George Newnes, Limited, Southampton Street, Strand.

The author is largely indebted in the earlier portion of this work to Canon Dalton's 'Cruise of H.M.S. Bacchante,' and he also acknowledges the assistance he has derived from Mr. Kinloch Cooke's authorised life of the late Duchess of Teck. From these and other sources he has Victoria, by F.C. Eeles. Oxford and London: A. R. Mowbray & Co.

This is an unambitious little volume, yielding, however, far more information, from a religious point of view in regard to the Coronation Service than many books of much greater size. The chief points to which the author directs attention are the relation of the King in this connection to the Church, as shown under the Jewish dispensation and in the Christian community; the history of the Service, with the various changes made in it from time to time; and the description of the ceremony. In an Appendix, occupying more than half the book, are the Coronation Service of King Charles I., representing the English Coronation Service as used from the beginning of the fourteenth to late in the seventeenth century, besides containing all the liturgical forms used in that service since Saxon times; a reprint of the Coronation Service of Queen Victoria, which may be taken as the form used followed at the Coronation service which he may possibly now think a little uncalled for and meaningless. But, as the author points out, the ceremony, if it be looked into more closely, is seen to be built up of a number of different actions, all of which have an important bearing upon the dedication of the King to his high office.' The origin of many of these customs is briefly explained in the introductory chapter, and we then pass to a consideration of the historical incidents of note in connection with the ceremony, Coronation tenures, services specially rendered at the Coronation, the office of King's Champion (a chivalrous post that was first dispensed with on the accession to the throne of William IV.), the Coronation of our last King and Queen, and of Victoria, and the Coronation Oath. The particulars given are very interesting, and frequently not a little amusing. Thus we learn that the ancient Coronation robes which were destroyed in 1649 were valued by the Parliamentary Commissioners built up a very interesting if not remarkably distinctive biography of the Heir-Apparent and his Consort. The principal points touched upon are the Prince's early boyhood and naval career, his betrothal and marriage to the Princess May, their home life in Norfolk and London, the visits to Ireland, part taken in public matters, the Prince's personal characteristics and hobbies, his position as a sportsman and philanthropist, and, finally, the tour of the royal couple through the colonies. The narrative, which is written in a thoroughly popular style and displays little critical tendency—the author apparently seeing in everything an occasion for warm commendation—is greatly enhanced by the numerous illustrations, which impart much animation and piquancy to its pages.

THE KINGS AND QUEENS OF ENGLAND: a Royal Portrait Gallery and Story Book for School and Home Reading. London: Office of 'Books for the Bairns,' Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

Readers must not imagine from the title to this work that it is of a highly artistic, ornamental character. The volume is exceedingly unpretentious, and it constitutes in fact a double number of the popular series known as 'Books for the Bairns.' But poor paper and not altogether satisfactory illustrations (though for the most part drawn from famous paintings in the National Portrait Gallery) cannot hide a certain aptitude in the writer for relating the facts of history in a way that will be attractive to the child mind; and being issued at an extremely moderate price, this 'Royal Portrait Gallery' should not be wanting in support from the public.

THE KING'S STONE AT KINGSTON-ON-THAMES UPON WHICH MANY OF THE SAXON KINGS WERE CROWNED.

From Coronation Ceremonies (GALE & POLDEN).

DEBRET'S GENEALOGICAL CHART, with Historical Notes by G. A. L., and Coronation Ceremonies, compiled by Vincent Pitman. London: Gale & Polden, Limited, and Dean & Son, Limited.

The opening pages of this work are more especially concerned with particulars of the Coronation of King Edward VII., and following these are a number of paragraphs recording the main features of previous ceremonies of this character. A full description of the Coronation of George III., taken from the Royal Magazine of September 1761, is next given, and this in its turn is succeeded by short chapters on the Coronation chair, Westminster Abbey, and the King in his relationship to the Government and the people. At the end of all comes the Genealogical Chart, which may be looked upon as the great feature of the volume. It is a very elaborate and interesting piece of work, the accuracy of which is vouched for by the College of Arms. Among its many important contents are reproductions from steel-plate engravings of portraits of all the Kings and Queens who have reigned in England from William I. to the present date, and also the armorial bearings of each of the eight Dynasties or Royal Houses through which the crown has descended to our present King, showing intermediate variations of the armorial designs, &c.

DEBRET'S DICTIONARY OF THE CORONATION, with many illustrations. London: Dean & Son, Ltd.; Gale & Polden, Ltd.

The object of this work is to supply the public in a convenient form with information regarding the ceremonies, customs, and events connected with a Coronation. In its pages are to be found particulars touching the Court of Claims, Regalia, Procession, Styles and Titles, Household Appointments, Officers of State and other officials (with biographies), Orders of Knighthood, State Departments, &c. A map of Central London is also included, and in an Appendix are some useful hints and suggestions addressed to those who are visiting the Metropolis for the first time, or are comparatively little acquainted with its streets. The explanations take the form of short articles, and are arranged alphabetically, with numerous cross-references. We cannot say, however, that great skill has been displayed in this department of the book, many of the paragraphs being placed under headings that would scarcely occur to the searcher after information, and the cross-references being multiplied to an extent that savours of padding; indeed, nearly half the volume seems to be made up of them, and on one page alone (108) there are no less than thirteen! But such particulars as the dictionary does afford are interesting and useful, and the difficulties of compiling such a work are no doubt very great.

KING EDWARD'S REALM: Story of the Making of the Empire, by the Rev. C. S. Dawe, B.A. London: Educational Supply Association, Limited, Holborn Viaduct.

The author has given a very interesting account of the building up of the Empire, and in doing so has by no means neglected the picturesque side of his subject. He divides his work into five periods, these respectively dealing with the years 1475-1603, 1603-1688, 1688-1763, 1763-1815, and the progress that has been made since the last-named date. In a concluding chapter he makes some sensible remarks on the growth of freedom, the imperial spirit of the British race, and the Sovereign in relation to the Empire. The book is not written for the student, though doubtless he will be able to glean some useful information from its pages, but for those general readers who would learn something of 'the men who have made the empire and of the principal events which stand out as mile-stones on the road along which our nation has travelled.'

THE GREAT SOLEMNITY OF THE CORONATION OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF ENGLAND according to the Use of the Church of Westminster, with Liturgical, Ceremonial, and Historical Notes,

Service, and possibly some who have been disposed to regard its ceremonial side rather lightly may see reason to change their views. The volume opens with some few words from Mr. Davenport on the binding of the various Coronation books. At one time, it would seem, an official book was kept for the taking of the Coronation oath, and this was used from the time of Henry I. until that of Henry VIII. It contained the Gospel of St. John, extracts from the Gospels of SS. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, with some other fragments, and an interlinear Saxon version. It was bound in very thick oaken boards covered with thin brown leather, and ornamented with a crucified figure of our Lord in gilt bronze. Following Mr. Davenport's interesting chapter, we find a plan of portion of the Abbey Church, with the various positions set out and an explanatory note, and this is succeeded after a few introductory lines by the book proper, opening with 'The Form and Order of the Service performed and the Ceremonies observed at the Coronation of her Majesty Queen Victoria in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster, on Thursday, June 28, 1838,' to which a number of interesting notes are attached. The Appendices of the volume are very lengthy, and form quite a third of its bulk. They mainly relate to ceremonies connected with the Coronation, such as the Procession from Westminster Hall, the Banquet and Feudal Services, the Progress through London and Westminster, and so forth. Before taking leave of this interesting volume we should mention that the binding is an accurate reproduction of the original cover of the letter that George IV. addressed to Lord Liverpool when presenting his father's library to the nation.

THE LIFE OF QUEEN ALEXANDRA, by Sarah A. Tooley. With one hundred and ten illustrations. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27 Paternoster Row. MCMII.

The life of the Queen offers many opportunities for popular and sympathetic treatment, and of these Mrs. Tooley has taken full advantage. She is also greatly assisted in her work of interesting the reader by a large number of illustrations, including portraits, singly and in by Douglas Maclean, M.A. With a Note on the Binding, by Cyril Davenport, F.S.A. London: F. E. Robinson & Co. 1902.

Few readers, we imagine, will rise from a perusal of this work without being greatly impressed by the solemnity of the Coronation groups, of the chief members of the British and Danish royal families. The book is portioned out into nine chapters, respectively descriptive of the Queen's early years in Denmark, her betrothal and marriage, first experiences of this country, the severe illness that overtook her in 1866 and the foreign travel that was subsequently undertaken, home life at Marlborough House and Sandringham, the time of anxiety during the illness of the King (then Prince of Wales), her devotion to her native land, conduct as Princess and Queen, and personal tastes and characteristics. The volume supplies a charming insight into the disposition of a refined, highly gifted woman; and though nothing is required in this country to increase our admiration for the Queen, these appreciative records of her life, so clearly showing the beautiful generous nature that animates her actions, will be read, we are sure, with pleasure by thousands.

A CHILD'S LIFE OF THE KING FROM HIS BIRTH TO HIS CORONATION, by Alton Towers, illustrated by Edmund Smyth. London: William Heinemann. 1902.

This is a little book that will heartily please all very young people, though we have our doubts as to whether they will not regard it somewhat in the light of a fairy story, to which the coloured illustrations in the juvenile mind may give it a remarkable resemblance. 'On the ninth day of November, 1841, the church bells all over the United Kingdom were ringing merrily, for a little prince had been born at Buckingham Palace, and the people rejoiced and were glad.' So the narrative begins, and on the opposite page the paragraph is faced by a rosy-cheeked child who has apparently been put to bed without depriving him of his pretty blue bonnet and similarly hued cape, and who in this disguise looks uncommonly like a girl. Here is an introduction, we are sure, that will quite take possession of the juvenile imagination and portend no end of adventures for his Majesty in the future. Perhaps when the same reader (or listener) sees a picture of the King shooting tigers in India, as portrayed on one of the following pages, he will feel that his anticipation of wonders was justified.

OUR KING AND QUEEN: the Story of their Life, by W. H. Wilkins, M.A., F.S.A. Part IV. London: Hutchinson & Co.

This serial shows no diminution in the excellence of its matter and illustration the further it advances. The present issue is mainly remarkable for the number of portraits of the King in his younger days, and these form an interesting subject of study when compared with his present appearance. The popular tendency nowadays is for illustrations, and so we shall not apologise to Mr. Wilkins for mentioning these before his own work, which has been performed with excellent skill and capability.

SCOTTISH ARTS AND LETTERS: a Quarterly Review of Literature and the Liberal Arts, edited by Arnold Fraser-Lovat. May-July, 1902. Coronation Number. Glasgow: Scottish Arts and Letters, 153 West Nile Street.

Naturally every periodical at this joyful season takes on something of a Coronation tone, and our neighbours across the Border are plainly quite as enthusiastic as ourselves. The present number of this highly interesting and artistic magazine is distinguished by several articles directly inspired by the occasion. Thus Mr. Robert Aitken writes of Andrew Melville and William Drummond of Hawthornden, 'Two Scottish Coronation Poets'; from Professor Cooper's scholarly pen proceeds a paper on 'The Last Four Scottish Coronations'; Mr. J. H. Stevenson treats respectively of the crowning of James VI., Anne of Denmark, Charles I. and Charles II.; while to Mr. Jas. A. Manson's share falls the article on 'The Crowning of the King,' and Mr. J. L. Caw contributes much readable information in regard to 'Scottish Coronation Portraits.' Add to these attractions of the letterpress a perfect gallery of beautifully reproduced historical portraits, both in the magazine itself and in 'The Portfolio' that accompanies it, and the reader should have little difficulty in perceiving that his best interests will be served by purchasing the number without delay.

THE COMING CORONATION, by A. F. Harris. London: Jarrold & Sons, 10 and 11 Warwick Lane, E.C. 1902.

The author of this little pamphlet has taken opportunity of the Coronation to draw attention to certain religious reflections that the ceremony suggests. He urges all his readers to prepare themselves for the great Coronation day of the future when our Saviour shall reign upon earth again.

CORONATION PRAYER BOOKS AND BIBLES.

We have received from Mr. Frowde specimen copies of the several Prayer Books and Bibles specially prepared by the Oxford University Press for presentation in schools, and at local celebrations, in commemoration of the Coronation of their Majesties. Each volume contains a portrait of the King and Queen, presentation book-plate, and appropriate design on the covers. Purchasers of a thousand copies of any of these books, we understand, can have a special device or inscription stamped on the cover free of charge. 'The Royal Commemoration Prayer Book' is also issued combined with 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' and in various styles of binding. The more expensive editions contain, in addition to portraits of the King and Queen, sixteen full-page illustrations, as well as a more elaborate presentation book-plate. All the Prayer Books give the form of Service that will be observed at Westminster Abbey on Coronation Day. They are extremely suitable for presents, and, being in use in after years, should always agreeably serve to carry the mind back to a most solemn and memorable occasion.

The Cambridge University Press have also issued a number of Prayer Books admirably adapted for presentation purposes. Like the Oxford Series, they can be had in different degrees of binding, ranging from ordinary cloth to vellum, with special commemorative designs. In this case, however, the Coronation Service is given at the commencement of the volume instead of at the end. Each book contains portraits of the King and Queen, and 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' Of the excellent production of these volumes, knowing the source from which they proceed, it is hardly necessary to speak. Paper, printing, and binding are alike admirable. The copy in vellum bevelled boards, decorated with the National Arms, strikes us as particularly attractive. Several of the Cambridge editions of the Book of Common Prayer, the Holy Bible and Authorised and Revised Versions, and the New Testament Revised Version, which have been specially prepared to commemorate the Coronation of their Majesties King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, are extremely suitable as presents to school children. Each book contains portraits of their Majesties the King and Queen, and a presentation label, and is bound in royal red cloth, with the Royal monogram and crown blocked in on the side in gold. The name of the donor can be printed free of charge on the presentation label for orders of not less than one thousand copies.

THE CORONATION OF KING EDGAR,
'THE PEACEABLE,' AT BATH,
A.D. 973.

The coronation of King Edgar, or Eadgar, in the year 973, in the ancient abbey of Bath—not, of course, the present building, but one which stood on or about the same site—is the first recorded instance of a coronation of an English king in which the Archbishop of the 'Northumbrians' took part, and this is certainly not without its significance. It is also the first coronation of which we have anything like a minute description.

Edgar, the king of the English, was born in 944.

He was probably brought up at the Court of his uncle Eadred. On the accession of his brother Eadwig, Edgar resided at his Court. He was chosen king before the close of 957 by the insurgents of the north, and the kingdom being divided, he ruled over the land north of the Thames. On the death of his brother, the unhappy Prince Eadwig, were said, the Archbishops anointed him, the antiphon, 'Zadok the priest,' was sung, and all joined in the shout, 'Let the king live for ever.'

Dunstan next invested him with the ring and sword, placed the crown on his head, and the sceptre and rod in his hands, and both the Archbishops enthroned him.

The splendour and solemnity of the ceremony evidently took strong hold on the imagination of the people.

'There was bliss mickle
On that happy day
Caused to all,'

says a poem in commemoration of the event, preserved in the Saxon Chronicle.

'Of priests a heap,
Of monks much crowd,
I understand.'

It was a glorious day. From Bath he proceeded on his annual sea-voyage round the island, and on his arrival at Chester eight kings awaited him to do him homage, and all swore 'to be faithful to him and to be his

Two years after the coronation at Bath, Edgar died, or, in the language of the Saxon poet, ended his 'earthly joys, chose him another light, beauteous and winsome, and left this frail, this barren life.'

All unnecessary interference was avoided, and in every way possible local machinery was strengthened for the general good of the nation. In order to rid the coasts of the northern pirates, he organised a system of naval defence. He formed three fleets of twelve thousand vessels each, and every year after the Easter festival he sailed with each of these fleets in turn along the whole coast.

Within the land, to use the chronicler's words, 'the folks' peace bettered the most of the kings that were before him.' He went through all the provinces and made inquisition as to how the great men administered the laws, and whether the poor were oppressed by the mighty.

The characteristic of Edgar's reign which impressed the men of his time most forcibly was the peace he gave to his people. 'God in October, 959, Edgar, who was then sixteen, succeeded to the kingdom of the West Saxons, as well as of the Mercians and Northumbrians.

Edgar was 'at length' solemnly crowned in his twenty-ninth year. The ceremony took place in the Abbey Church, Bath, on Whit Sunday, May 11, 973, by the Archbishops Dunstan and Oswald, in the presence of a vast assembly of the 'witan.' Why this ceremony had not taken place earlier is a matter of uncertainty. The king entered the church wearing his crown, and laid it aside as he knelt before the altar. Dunstan then began the 'Te Deum.' At the conclusion of the hymn the bishop raised the king from his knees, and at Dunstan's dictation he took a threefold oath—that the Church of God and all Christian people should enjoy true peace for ever, that he would forbid all wrong and all robbery to all degrees, and that he would command justice and mercy in all judgments. Then the consecration prayers fellow-workers by sea and land.' They included the kings of the Scots, of Cumberland, of the Isles, and five Welsh princes.

A splendid procession by water introduced the ceremony. Edgar assumed his seat at the stern of the royal barge, and his tributaries taking the oars, rowed the monarch to the monastery of St. John the Baptist, where they offered up their orisons, the bishops and noblemen following in their state barges, and returning the acclamations of the populace who lined the shores. They returned in the same order to the palace, Edgar concealing not his exultation, but exclaimed to the nobles present that his successors might now truly glory in the title of King of England, when they could command the obedience of so many kings.

Even the Danes of Ireland were friendly, and acknowledged the power, if not the supremacy of the English king, for coins of Edgar were minted at Dublin.

him granted that he dwelt in peace,' and the evil days that followed his death made men dwell on this so that he came to be called 'Edgar the Peaceful King.' He died on July 8, 975, in his thirty-second year, and was buried at Glastonbury.

In 1052 his body was translated to a shrine above the altar of the Abbey Church, and even at that time he was revered as a saint at Glastonbury, and is said to have worked miracles.

J. F. MEEHAN, in The Beacon.

NOTE.—In commemoration of the coronation of Edgar, and for favours bestowed by him on the town and monastery, a statue of that king was erected over the north front of the mediæval town hall. The remains of this statue may still be seen in a niche over No. 8 Bath Street.

[We are indebted to Mr. F. Meehan, of Bath, for this interesting article and the illustration.—ED. P.C.]

ROYALTY AND THE CORONATION OF KING EDGAR AT BATH.

Mr. J. F. Meehan has received from their Majesties the King and Queen acknowledgment as follows of the receipt of presentation copies of his article on the Coronation of King Edgar, at Bath, A.D. 973, which appears in the current number of the Beacon:—

'Privy Purse Office, Buckingham Palace.

'The Private Secretary is commanded by the King to thank Mr. J. F. Meehan for his letter of the 17th inst., with the enclosed copy of the account of King Edgar's Coronation.

'21st May, 1902.'

'Windsor Castle: May 21, 1902.

'Miss Knollys is commanded by the Queen to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. J. F. Meehan's letter, and to thank him for the interesting article enclosed in the same.'

VOL. II. OF 'THE TIMES HISTORY OF THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.'

Captain Mahan, in reviewing the work in the Times, says: 'For the rest, ample means for testing either view will be found in the narrative, which is full, clear, and forcible, accompanied with abundance of graphic illustration, by map and plan, to elucidate the text. The care and skill of Mr. Amery and his associates, in collecting and digesting the ample material in their hands, are abundantly evident; and as their main sources of information have been strengthened or corrected by the personal testimony of numerous eyewitnesses, who have contributed the results of their own observation, the whole constitutes a comprehensive and invaluable record of a period of vital importance to the history of the Empire. Pretence to ornamentation of style is discarded; but the intrinsic interest of the subject and the clearness of the exposition chain the attention. Hence the book is emphatically pleasant reading, although the general colouring is necessarily sombre. It could not well be otherwise, for the period dealt with was one of gloom and anxiety not soon to be forgotten by those who underwent them. A bitter experience is recalled, reproducing the painful impressions it caused; but it will not have been in vain if the fruits are duly garnered.'

Notices of Books

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Henry Osmond,' by William Makepeace Thackeray. Two volumes. This further issue in the new edition of Thackeray's prose works which Messrs. Dent are now publishing only serves to increase our respect for the highly efficient manner, equally as regards editing, illustration, and general production, in which the various volumes are turned out. The bibliographical note supplied by Mr. Walter Jerrold to 'Esmond' is quite a model of what such an introduction should be, and of Mr. C. E. Brock's illustrations it need only be said that they display a thorough appreciation of the text, and are executed with fine judgment and skill.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Woodside Farm,' by Mrs. W. K. Clifford. 'Margaret Vincent is the heroine of this story': that is the first line of the book; and Margaret duly appears on the last page, happy, contented, and—married. Her father, Gerald Vincent, was the son of Lord Eastliegh, a profligate, happy-go-lucky spendthrift. Vincent himself was intended for the Church, but ruined his career by turning atheist and by loudly proclaiming the fact in certain magazines. He settled down as a lodger at Woodside Farm, married his landlady, Mrs. Barton, and lived happily ever after. But the story does not concern him so much as his step-daughter, Hannah, and his own child, Margaret. Their love affairs are related at some length and with no small amount of psychological insight. But the most carefully drawn character in the book is Mrs. Barton, a really lifelike portraiture of a lovable and dignified woman. Mrs. Clifford has succeeded in writing a well-reasoned piece of work, and those who prefer mature and well-considered writing to the sensationalism of other novelists should not miss the opportunity of reading this latest product of her talented pen.

From Mr. Otto Harrassowitz, Leipzig.—'Centralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, 1902,' Heft 4, 5 (April, May). Heft 4 (April) contains Konrad Schiffmann on the history of the Library of Salzburg Cathedral Chapter; Father Gabriel Mein on the Swiss National Library; Father D. Johnner on Italian printing of musical notes; S. Frankfurter on the Renewal of the Alphabetical Volume Catalogue of the Vienna University Library, and reviews and notices of books, library news, &c. Heft 5 (May) contains an interesting paper by Karl Shorbach on the litigation between the noble Lady Ennelin zu der Tserin Thür, Strassburg, on the one side, and Johann Glensfleisch, of Maintz, whom people called Gutenberg, and Ennel Gutenberg on the other; a list of photographs of the treasures in the Royal Court and States Library at Munich, by Franz Boll; reviews and notices of books, library news, and miscellaneous notes.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'Parliament: its Romance, its Comedy, its Pathos,' by Michael MacDonagh. Mr. MacDonagh is an old observer of the ways of Parliament in their more human aspect, and his present volume is a worthy successor to his previous work on 'The Book of Parliament,' in which he described our two great ruling bodies engaged in the occupation of law-making. The contents originally appeared as articles in various magazines, of which the Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly Review, Good Words, Temple Bar, and Macmillan's Magazine, may be mentioned as the most prominent, but readers, we are sure, will be glad to have them in collected form, and the volume is well worthy of a place on the library shelves. Among the subjects treated of are 'The King: his Prerogatives and Disabilities,' 'The Great Seal of England,' 'The Evolution of the Parliamentary Oath,' 'The Quaint Side of Parliament,' 'Maiden Speeches,' 'Unparliamentary Expressions,' and 'The Humours of Parliamentary Reporting.' The volume runs to some four hundred pages, and will be found delightful reading by all who are not so stolidly political as to be unappre-ciative of the lighter side of parliamentary life.

From Mr. John Long.—'His Italian Wife,' by Lucas Cleeve. The author gives in this story a very charming description of an old clergyman, simple-minded and affectionate, who is the victim of a selfish, extravagant girl, the illegitimate daughter of an Italian woman whom he has married in a large measure through pity. The Reverend William (his other name by the way is Paget, but this is rarely mentioned) lives at his vicarage in Berkshire, and his wife at her pretty villa near Florence. Once she comes to this country and takes up her residence with her husband at the vicarage, but the experiment is not a success, her foreign ways hardly suiting the position of a clergyman's wife, and her thoughts all being with the bright sunny Italy she has left; and so she speedily returns to the Villa Torlania and its delightful surroundings again. Years pass away, and the daughter—who is quite in ignorance as to her parentage and believes the Rev. William to be her father—marries a young politician, Lord Majendie, and her demands upon the Rev. William's purse become yearly more pressing. First it is five hundred pounds, then two thousand, and eventually it reaches the exorbitant sum of five thousand. To meet these constant claims the poor clergyman has to dispose of all his property, and to reduce his personal expenditure to the narrowest limits. His wife has by this time died, showing more love for him at their parting than she has ever evinced before. But at length he can stand it no longer, and he tells Lady Majendie who her real father is, at the same time refusing to be bled any more. This bare outline of the plot furnishes but a poor idea of the interest of Lucas Cleeve's story, which in many respects is one of the best things she has yet done.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'The Sin of Joost Avelingh,' by Maarten Maartens. Admirers of this popular novelist will welcome a cheap edition of this well-written Dutch story. It was originally published thirteen years ago, and has deservedly been a successful work.

From Mr. Andrew Melrose.—'The Crown of Science: the Incarnation of God in Mankind,' by A. Morris Stewart, M.A. The majority of readers at the present day are scarcely inclined to serious literature, and the newspapers and light fiction mostly content them. But if they could haply be detached from thoughts mundane to the contemplation of higher matters, we could promise them much food for profitable reflection in this volume. The author has evidently a very clear conception of what he wishes to say, and he is appropriately vigorous and pointed in his manner of saying it. His volume, to quote his own introduction, 'is an attempt to indicate how one among the many seekers after unity of thought balances the two sides of his religious equation, and relates his religious beliefs with those large ideas which are abroad in the secular thought of to-day.' Whether he has altogether succeeded in his object we leave others to determine; of the interest of his inquiry there can be little or no question.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Caxton' Series. Illustrated Reprints of Famous

Classics: 'The Serious Poems of Thomas Hood,' illustrated by H. Granville Fell. The 'Caxton' series, already so rich in good works, has added another in this most desirable volume, containing a choice collection of poetic gems written by him who sang the 'Song of the Shirt': 'A writer whose various pen touched alike the springs of laughter and the source of tears,' to use the words of Douglas Jerrold. Among these serious pieces is that weird romance, 'The Haunted House,' which so auspiciously opened the first number of the poet's ill-starred speculation, Hood's Magazine. A picture of the haunted house, equally worthy of the poem and of the artist, from the facile pencil of Thomas Creswick, R.A., formed a beautiful frontispiece to the number which appeared on Jan 1, 1844. No long time after, on May 3, 1845, poor Hood died, his death having been probably hastened by the pecuniary want of success of his magazine. Mr. H. Granville Fell has made some graceful drawings for this volume. The frontispiece, illustrating the Bridge of Sighs, seems to us the most successful of these illustrations.

From Otto, Limited, Carmelite House, Carmelite Street, E.C.—'The Connoisseur Portfolio, No. 1: Fair Women of the XVIIIth Century.' Beyond a considerable distaste for the paper on which the opening letterpress is printed, which offends the eye and seems singularly common and inartistic in a work of this description, it is impossible to feel anything but admiration for this production. The introductory matter affords interesting information in respect of the painters and engravers of the several portraits, and then follow the portraits themselves, which, with perhaps one exception, are exquisitely reproduced from the original paintings by Sir Joshua Reynolds, J. Opie, J. Hoppner, and others. The 'fair women,' thus taken as representative of the feminine beauty of a century, are the Right Hon. Countess Spencer, the Hon. Miss Bingham, 'Almeria,' Mrs. Burwell, the Hon. Mrs. E. Bouverie, Sir Joshua Reynolds's 'Bacchante,' and J. Hoppner's realisation of 'Sophia Western.' This new departure of the Connoisseur proprietors should be attended with great success.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Edward Plantagenet,' by Edward Jenks, M.A. This new volume in the 'Heroes of the Nations' series is a work of sound scholarship and well-balanced judgment. 'As a lawyer Mr. Jenks has been attracted to the character and reign of Edward I. with more than ordinary enthusiasm, for it was during Edward Plantagenet's reign that the Common Law came into existence, and, as the author himself points out, it is difficult to understand 'how anyone but a lawyer can possibly appreciate the true inwardness of Edward's reign. . . . The Common Law . . . is the very picture of English national life, the concrete form into which the national spirit crystallises with the moving centuries.' However true this may be, Mr. Jenks certainly succeeds in explaining to the lay mind something of the wonderful progress that was achieved in the way of the development of law by the English Justinian. His book is written 'absolutely from first-hand sources,' but is in no sense too technical for the general reader. Illustrations are plentiful, and, in addition to a complete index, the author has added a useful chronological summary of events.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'Building in Silence: a Book of Wayside Thoughts,' by the Rev. James Black, M.A., A.T.S. We learn from the preface to this volume that the papers it contains have, with one exception, already appeared as leading articles in the Sunday School Chronicle. The title is suggested by the building of Solomon's Temple, the materials of which having been previously prepared with such careful accuracy that the structure was reared without sound of axe or hammer or any instrument of iron; and from this the lesson is drawn that man's best work is done beyond the range of mortal hearing. 'The work that is accompanied by the sound of hammer or axe or tool of iron is not in its highest stage. It wants the finish of a higher consecration.' These twenty-two papers, dealing with a variety of subjects, are well written, and of a value and an importance difficult to over-estimate.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Japan, Our New Ally,' by Alfred Stead. His Excellency the Marquis Ito in his preface to this volume speaks of Mr. Stead as a man 'keen and impartial in his judgments, and a man who has made, with remarkable intelligence, an extremely assiduous study on the spot of the subject' of which he writes. These unusual qualities are exemplified in the work before us, for though Mr. Stead has not treated his subject exhaustively, he has none the less succeeded in giving to the average reader a very general and vivid account of the Extreme Orient as he found it. The fact that his book has already passed into a second edition is proof of its value, particularly as at the present moment the interest of English people is so largely centred in that strange Eastern country of which, unhappily, we know so little. Mr. Stead's scheme is comprehensive: he deals with Japanese philanthropy, labour, education, commerce, patents, finance, military strength, navy, police, &c. His pages on leading men of Japan are particularly valuable, as he knows many of them intimately, having received them in his own house in Japan, and having visited theirs on many occasions. An appendix contains the text of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of Alliance, which, the author informs us, 'was received with universal enthusiasm in Japan.' We prophesy for the book a continuation of the success which it has already so deservedly begun to enjoy.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Childerbridge Mystery,' by Guy Boothby. Mr. Boothby evidently believes that he has an unfailing body of supporters, otherwise he would never try their allegiance so acutely as he has done of late. Knowing what we do of the author and the cleverness he displayed in his earlier novels, we cannot but feel irritated at 'The Childerbridge Mystery.' The book is loosely constructed, carelessly written, and in every way unworthy of Mr. Boothby's capabilities. The story describes how a successful settler in Australia, who has amassed half a million of money, returns to this country, takes an old house a few miles out of London, which is supposed to be haunted, and one morning is found strangled in bed, the murder having presumably been committed by a suspicious character who has followed him from Australia, and whose sole hold over him, so darkly hinted at throughout the narrative, turns out to be that he is his wife's good-for-nothing brother. The real perpetrator of the crime is an old gentleman who lives at some distance from Childerbridge Manor, but finds his way there through a subterranean passage. Of course there is a love entanglement attached to the story, and readers accustomed to sensational literature will not be surprised to learn that the son of the Australian squatter is desperately enamoured of the ward of the man who accomplishes his death. The dialogue of the novel is exceedingly crude, and seldom rises to the requirements of the situation. Mr. Boothby can do infinitely better work than this, and we trust his next book will show that he has returned to his earlier and more artistic methods.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these columns.

All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning.

WILLIAM BLACK, NOVELIST

By SIR WEMYSS REID.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

'An admirable memoir. Sir Wemyss Reid has made an attractive portrait of this strong, self-contained Scot, a curious blend of poetry, Highland mysticism, and of the practical shrewdness of his nation. . . . A biography which, as a sincere and discriminating tribute to the memory of a friend, is a model of its kind.'

MORNING POST.

'The biography is a delightfully vivid sketch. . . . The book is decidedly one to be read.'

DAILY EXPRESS.

'It appears to me, from my own slight but delightful recollections of William Black, that Sir Wemyss Reid has achieved one of the most perfect biographies in the language.'

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Full of characteristic anecdotes.'

DAILY NEWS.

'A very readable account of the career and the character of an author whose personality was as engaging, as lovable, as his stories—which is saying a great deal.'

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

'Sir Wemyss Reid has constructed a vivid and pleasing portrait of the man himself, while contributing at the same time an interesting chapter to literary history.'

GLOBE.

'Sir Wemyss Reid deserves great credit for the skill with which he has rendered his hero's life story.'

SPHERE.

'Sir Wemyss Reid has done his work excellently. . . . A kindly, genial portrait, and a book that makes good reading.'

BRITISH WEEKLY.

'Sir Wemyss Reid has done well to give us this record of his friend's personality, and it will be received with deserved gratitude.'

WORLD.

'Of his personal character and domestic life Sir Wemyss Reid presents many pleasant glimpses in this memoir, which reproduces many of his quaint and characteristic letters, and which will be welcomed alike by those who were his personal friends and by the reading public which delighted and still, in a measure, delights in his works.'

BIRMINGHAM POST.

'The biography deals largely with Black's character as a man as well as with his literary powers, and the conclusion to which it will lead most readers is that both were alike admirable.'

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

'The admirable exposition of the actual genesis and evolution of his novels, which is quoted in extenso at pp. 206-10, is a literary document of real psychological importance. . . . Space prevents our noting many other points of interest freely strewn over his pages by the biographer.'

LEEDS MERCURY.

'We have exhausted our space, but we are very far from having exhausted the interest of this biography.'

YORKSHIRE POST.

'This biography of a popular and strong writer of novels has the interest, which will soon be a rare interest, of being fresh in almost all its facts, and in its picture of the man.'

SCOTSMAN.

'In the preparation of Black's "Life" Sir Wemyss Reid has shown the rare skill which he displayed in writing several other biographies which have enjoyed well-deserved popularity.'

for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, send post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

BOOK BEGGARS AND EXTRACTORS.

Some time ago we referred to the impudent manner in which certain boiler-down of literature make books, and our remarks gave great offence to one or two of them, who claimed that cribbing the cream of a big volume and publishing it in a small one was the finest form of advertisement; so it is—for them. But publishers are often pestered by book beggars who are satisfied if they can extract a copy of a book 'for review'—some of them, hailing from France, ask for two copies. They are not at all particular as to the nature of the book, and will cheerfully suggest, for instance, that a treatise on compressed air or the purification of sewage should be presented to them for notice in the Pious Pumper or the Spiritual Shovel; what they want is the book. Sometimes these periodicals exist and sometimes they do not. We reported recently the case of a gentleman who had succeeded in extracting many books for notice in a periodical which was dead; his defence was that it was not really dead; only defunct for a time, like Kaiser Barbarossa.

Another class of book beggars—rather a large one—includes the gentleman who calls himself a 'Literary Bureau,' or claims to be the 'Literary Correspondent' of some continental periodical; it also includes many so-called professors of music, or mathematics, literature, &c., who claim to be in a position to introduce new works to schools and colleges, or say that they are compiling a manual and will be glad to notice Messrs. So-and-So's Text-book on the subject. Then there are the gentlemen, and ladies also, who are evidently no novices in the art of begging for books for Bazaars, Charities, Parochial Institutes, Book Clubs, &c. Of course we do not wish to infer that all these applicants for gifts of books are not perfectly genuine, and in some cases worthy of attention; but, as Mr. Heinemann pointed out a year or two ago, if publishers were to compare notes with respect to these applications they would find that in the majority of cases it was simply a systematic endeavour to get books for nothing.

AN IMPUDENT OFFER.

We are glad to say that our Postal and Customs authorities are seconding the efforts of Scotland Yard to prevent the importation of objectionable books into this country, so the purveyors of such works on the Continent have to be up to other dodges. Here is a copy of an impudent circular which an indignant bookseller sends to us, and says it was accompanied by a letter asking him to 'circulate' the ten copies of a catalogue of these vile works, ranging in price from £1. 1s. to £10. 10s. or more, and pointing out how it is proposed to evade our laws.

COPY OF CIRCULAR.

'Mr. H. S. Nichols, of Paris, has received letters from book collectors and students resident in the British Isles, who are desirous of purchasing books out of his catalogues, but who refrain from doing so because they decline to place themselves in the position of being subjected to the possibility of annoyance or interference from either the Postal or Customs Authorities.'

'It is therefore considered necessary to assure intending purchasers that they need have no anxiety with regard to any books they may order being delivered to them safely and securely.'

'The books are not despatched through the post at all, a far simpler and absolutely safer method is adopted, which is that Mr. Nichols himself brings the books over to England, and when he has got them safely through the Customs they are packed, addressed, and despatched to their respective destinations.'

'It will be observed that delivery is thus effected with the least possible delay, and with the maximum of safety and security, and as careful personal attention is given to every order, purchasers consequently may rely upon their individual wishes and instructions being carried out.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A second edition of Mr. Milne's 'Epistles of Atkins' will be published by Mr. Unwin next week.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Dr. Blake Knox's book on 'Buller's Campaign with the Natal Field Force, 1900,' which has been so widely noticed in the press and of which the first edition is nearly exhausted already, though its publication was only simultaneous with that of the Spion Kop despatches.

We were delighted to have a visit the other day from M. Fouret, of Messrs. Hachette & Cie. of Paris, and to have a chat about business. It seems that the net system is gradually but slowly making its way in France. It was the cause of a criminal action being brought against M. Fouret, as President of the French Publishers' Association, by a provincial bookseller, who tried to make out that the refusal to supply him with books was a criminal offence. We are glad to say M. Fouret was not put into prison, but it cost his Association ten thousand francs to defend the action. The book trade in France is very dull it seems. We asked M. Fouret if it was suffering from over-production. 'Not so much over-production perhaps as want of speculation on the part of the public, who won't buy,' said M. Fouret, who thought that things would improve now the war is over—but it will be a gradual improvement.

Mr. John Lane has ready for immediate publication a new poem by Mr. William Watson, entitled 'Ode on the Day of the Coronation of King Edward VII.' It is the longest poem Mr. Watson has written since his early work 'The Prince's Quest.'

'Alan Macdonald' is the nom de plume of a new author who has just written a novel entitled 'Reconciled,' a romance of Kashmir, which Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co. will publish shortly. They inform us that 'The author is a great-grand-nephew of Jane Austen.'

His Majesty the King and her Majesty Queen Alexandra have graciously accepted copies 1 and 2 respectively, of a unique édition de luxe of the Coronation Service at Westminster Abbey. This edition, which will be published on the 16th inst., will be hand-printed by Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, on vellum, from the King's Printers' original old face type, and bound in vellum, with bevelled boards, solid gilt edges, and with the royal arms worked in gold on the front cover. The number of copies will be limited to 500. The work will make a volume of sixty-four pages, and when bound will measure in inches $9\frac{3}{4} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$. It is the desire of the King's Printers to make this édition de

June of the Coronation Service a permanent souvenir, as well as a beautiful work commemorating a great historical event.

Messrs. Longmans will publish this month 'The Memoirs of Sir Edward Blount, K.C.B. &c.', edited by Stuart J. Reid, Author of 'The Life and Times of Sydney Smith' &c., with 3 photogravure plates, 8vo. Sir Edward Blount's reminiscences open with the return of Lord Anglesey, after the Battle of Waterloo, and practically end with the death of Queen Victoria.

A treatise on 'The Development of Cabinet Government in England,' by Miss M. B. Taylor, an American student with an Oxford training, is now published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

A fine work which is to be published by subscription only by the De La More Press, 299 Regent Street, London, is entitled 'Historical Bookbindings in the University of Cambridge.' The work is intended to present a concise, accurate, and detailed description of all the ornamental bookbindings in the college and public libraries of the University of Cambridge. It will contain a great number of beautiful reproductions in colour, as well as some illustrations in colotype. An important and unique feature of the book will be accurate drawings of those stamps and tools which the authors believe are likely to prove interesting, either as curious examples of ornament, or as being helpful in the identification of any particular artist's work. There will be an appendix containing references to and information concerning certain bookbinders examples of whose work are known or believed to be at Cambridge. The book will contain about 50 plates, many of which will be in colour, and all from photographs taken direct from the various books themselves especially for the work.

Mr. J. M. Barrie's new story will be entitled 'The Little White Bird,' and will be published before the end of the year by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. Messrs. Scribner & Sons will be the American publishers.

The latest volume in the Macmillan Co.'s Citizen's Library is a series of studies on 'Democracy and Social Ethics,' by Jane Addams, a member of a settlement in one of the poorer quarters of Chicago.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is publishing immediately, under the title of 'From Slave to College President,' a Life of Booker T. Washington, by Mr. G. Holden Pike. Booker Washington is the most distinguished negro of his times, and the story of his efforts in behalf of his own race is full of interest. He began his school work in a half-ruinous building in 1881, and now his Institute in Alabama for coloured students is surrounded by 2,000 acres of land, while the students number more than a thousand.

Among the stories and articles in Chambers' Journal for July are: 'Clipped Wings,' by Mary Stuart Boyd, which is drawing to a close, and will be followed by a romance by Mr. E. Cule, entitled 'Prince Adrian of Zell.' Lieut.-Col. Mockler Ferryman contributes the 'Finding of the White Lama.' There are two holiday papers, 'The Spell of Loch Skene,' and 'A Little Holiday in Sussex,' by Kate Burgess.

The Board of Agriculture notify that the memoirs, as well as the maps, of the 'Geological Survey' are now supplied direct from the Ordnance Survey Office at Southampton.

Mr. Booker T. Washington's autobiography, 'Up from Slavery,' will shortly be issued by Mr. Grant Richards, to whom the publication has been transferred from Mr. Fisher Unwin.

That veteran worker in the cause of Imperial Federation, Sir Frederick Young, has written an account of his last year's tour in Canada, when he had the good fortune to assist at some of the ceremonies inaugurated in honour of the Duke and Duchess of York in the chief cities of the Dominion. The book, which is entitled 'A Pioneer of Imperial Federation in Canada,' restates for present conditions the author's opinions upon this great national subject, and contains portraits of the chief Canadian statesmen. It will be published immediately by Mr. George Allen.

Mr. Ernest Henderson, an American historian, dedicates to Prince Henry of Prussia his 'Short History of Germany,' which is published opportunely by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The work follows the Germans from our first glimpse of them in Roman records, and Mr. Henderson claims that such a chronicle is a better clue to the development of Europe than is afforded by the study of French history.

Recalling Mr. Arthur Balfour's striking allusion to the numberless documents which had accumulated for signature between the death of Queen Victoria and his present Majesty's official assumption of regal duties, it is interesting to learn that when William IV. had made 'a determination never to lay his head on his pillow till he had signed everything he ought on the day,' it cost him 'cruel suffering' with cramp, so that on some occasions he 'was obliged to stop three times and put his hand in hot water.' The fact is noted in a little volume entitled 'Glimpses of William IV. and Queen Adelaide' in letters of the late Miss Clitherow, of Boston House, containing intimate personal reminiscences, which Mr. Brimley Johnson has ready for immediate publication.

Mr. George Rooper describes in the June number of Longman's Magazine his experiences and impressions in connection with a trial for murder which took place in 1820. He calls his article 'Circumstantial Evidence, 1820,' and it is extraordinary that more than 80 years after the events described Mr. George Rooper should be able to give such a vivid and interesting account of them.

Acting on the suggestion conveyed by H. M. Inspectors of Schools, that the reading of good lyrical poetry will be found of special value in the higher classes, Messrs. Macmillan have prepared and will publish directly 'The Globe Poetry Reader.' The book includes 183 pp. of selections from the best poets, from Shakespeare down to Mr. Kipling, and the extracts are carefully chosen so as to be of general interest to young readers, but mingle with the more stirring passages, such as Byron's description of the Eve of Waterloo, much also of a more purely lyrical character, as, for instance, Shelley's 'Ode to the West Wind.'

Mr. G. Bernard Shaw's play, 'Mrs. Warren's Profession,' will shortly be published in an acting edition by Mr. Grant Richards. There will be a number of illustrative portraits of the players who took part in the Stage Society's recent production of the piece.

Sale Records, a Priced and Annotated Record of London Book Auctions, is the title of a purely trade publication which will commence with the number for June to August 31, 1902. It will be published by Messrs. Karslake & Co., of 61 Charing Cross Road, quarterly, at the subscription price of 6s. for the year. It is to be supplied to 'bond-fide members of the trade only.'

'The Level of Social Motion,' by Mr. M. A. Lane, is a treatise partly social, partly economic, published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., in which the author claims to have discovered a law of human development from which he can deduce conclusions as to the outcome of social and economic struggles. He finds that human society is being led by the forces of natural selection to a state of general economic equality among human beings, and of equality in status and endowment between the sexes; and further to a point at which the population of the earth will become stable and normal, neither susceptible of increase nor decrease. But in the progress to this end the inferior races will be eliminated from an earth on which there will be no longer room for them. The argument of the book rests upon the view that civilised society, having become conscious of the law of evolution which has governed human development, will now be able to regulate its own action in the light of that law: the same consciousness modifying the moral code.

The island of Martinique has recently become an actuality to thousands of people who had only the vaguest idea of its whereabouts. An excellent idea of the historical importance of the island can be obtained from Mrs. Latimer's new novel, 'The Prince Incognito,' published by Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago. The hero of her story is wrecked on the shores of Martinique, and almost half of the book is devoted to his adventurous career there. Some charming pictures of the tropical beauty of the fated island are given, and there are many references to St. Pierre, Fort de France, and other names that have come so prominently into public notice through the terrible events of the past few weeks.

Mr. Grant Richards will shortly publish 'Spiderland,' by Rose Haig Thomas, author of 'Some Ballads.' The book is a series of tales for children embodying many facts of natural history, and told in simple language.

Dr. T. E. Thorpe, principal of the Government Laboratory in London, publishes with Messrs. Macmillan a new and large edition of a collection of lectures and addresses under the general title of 'Essays in Historical Chemistry.' The underlying purpose is to show how the greatest masters of chemical science have contributed to the development of the science through a period ranging from the reign of Charles II. to the present day.

The new edition of Mr. Bodley's monumental work on modern France, just issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., is prefaced by a few pages which describe the amusing but annoying experiences of French translators which forced the author to make his own version of the book for the French public.

Mrs. Chesson (Nora Hopper) has in the press a new volume of verse entitled 'Aquamarines,' to be published by Mr. Grant Richards.

In connection with the unveiling of the memorial to the late Archibald Forbes, the famous Daily News War Correspondent, that paper had on May 31 a most interesting interview with Sir John Robinson, who may be said to have discovered Forbes and many other of the men who did such splendid work for the Daily News.

Sir Reginald Hanson's Coronation gift to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's consists of sixteen specially bound demy 8vo. Oxford Prayer Books. The order has been executed by Mr. Charles Taylor, of Booke House, Warwick Lane, and the fine binding in full morocco does him great credit.

During the first four days of last week a valuable Library has been sold by Messrs. Sotheby—remarkable not so much for the rarity of the books as for their beautiful condition and fine modern bindings by Bedford, Hayday, Ramage, &c. High prices were obtained generally, and to show how Bacon is rising in the estimation of book collectors, if not of Shakespearians, a quite modern edition, edited by Mr. Spedding and published in 1870, fetched four guineas. It was a thin quarto, nicely bound by Bedford, and perhaps its published price was about four shillings.

But though high prices ruled there was one most notable exception, and that was Lot 1013, THE SOULDIERS CATECHISME, composed for the Parliament's army (J. Wright, 1644), bound by Hayday. This little book, but great literary curio, only exists in two or three copies, and was thought to have more to do with bringing King Charles's head to the block than any other contemporary book or pamphlet. It circulated among the common soldiers, and was in a small handy form, so that they could easily carry it about with them and consult it at spare moments. It was a companion book to the 'Souldiers Pocket Bible,' of which also only two or three copies have come down to us, one of these fetching $1,000 at an American book sale several years ago; nowadays, probably, it would fetch much more.

Both books undoubtedly rendered much assistance to Cromwell's policy, and in this sense they have rightly been called 'Cromwell's Soldier's Catechism,' and 'Cromwell's Soldier's Bible.'

Now on Thursday last this almost unique Catechism, finely bound, went for the sum of seven guineas! This seems to show that booksellers and bookbuyers sometimes, like Homer, fall into a doze and miss their opportunity. Anyhow, it shows that the chances of 'lucky finds' still exist even in the public auction rooms.

The Pilot is reduced in price to 3d.

The Bookman says: Dr. George MacDonald has arrived in England, and will as usual reside at Haslemere during the summer months.

'The Bears of Blue River,' by Charles Major (of whose earlier book, 'When Knighthood was in Flower,' some 400,000 copies were sold), is a story of young boys and girls in the Backwoods, and the adventures of infant hunters—principally with the race of bears. It is copiously illustrated and should make the joy of many schoolboys.

During Coronation week the Christian World will be published on Wednesday.

With the June issue, which commences its ninth year of publication, the penny monthly paper hitherto known as the Single Tax takes the name of Land Values. This paper claims to be 'the only journal in the United Kingdom wholly devoted to the advocacy of the taxation of land values.'

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. now publish the fourth and final volume of 'Huxley's Scientific Memoirs,' edited by Sir M. Foster and Professor Ray Lankester. The volume is mainly composed of biological and palaeontological papers.

His Majesty the King has accepted a morocco-bound copy of the new County Directory of Scotland, just issued by Messrs. R. Grant & Son, Edinburgh.

A new book by Mr. John Foster Fraser, entitled 'Vagabond Papers,' being a collection of sketches describing his experiences in various parts of the world, will shortly be issued by the Walter Scott Publishing Company.

Messrs. Inglis, Ker & Co., of Glasgow, announce a Life of Dr. Parker, by the Rev. Dr. Adamson, of Windermere.

Messrs. Greening & Co. will publish immediately a volume of Irish stories by Mr. Willoughby Matchett. The title of the volume is not yet decided, but it is said that the stories deal with the adventures of an Irishman at the Coronation.

'Love in Extremis' is the title of the new novel by the author of 'Red Pottage.'

Speaking of Bacon, it may not generally be known that his Honour Judge Willis, K.C., delivered a lecture on Shakespeare v. Bacon in the Hall of the Inner Temple on Thursday last. He threw the lecture into the form of a trial supposed to be held about 1627, when both parties were dead, to determine whether the Shakespeare First Folio of 1623 was written by the man whose name it bears or by the late Lord Chancellor Bacon.

The lecture was most lively and amusing through the examination and cross-examination of the witnesses, especially of Ben Jonson, who was a long time in the box. The evidence given at the trial showed much research on the part of the learned judge, who read the account of it to the audience at the Inner Temple, and the summing-up and the verdict were both in favour of the claims of the man whose name and portrait appear so prominently at the beginning of the First Folio of 1623—William Shakespeare.

DEATH OF MR. GEORGE PHILIP, SENR.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. George Philip, Senr., Chairman of Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd., Fleet Street—which took place on May 30 last. Next week we hope to give a portrait and notice of Mr. Philip.

FIFTY YEARS WITH THE BLACKWOODS.

Mr. Robert H. Lauder, cashier to Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons, publishers, was on Saturday presented with a gold watch by the staff on the occasion of his completing fifty years' service with the firm. The presentation was made in the historic 'Old Saloon,' at 45 George Street, by Mr. G. A. Morton, the manager, in presence of the members of the staff. Mr. Lauder entered the firm shortly after the late Mr. John Blackwood succeeded to the management of the house, and his recollections go back to the time when Wilson, Aytoun, and De Quincey were still writing for 'Maga.'

RICHARDSON'S 'WAR OF 1812.'

John Richardson (1796-1852) was the Fennimore Cooper of Canada, and his novel, 'Wacousta,' might well be reprinted in England, where it is too little known. Having taken a patriotic and active part in the defence of Canada in the war of 1812, he planned a history of that campaign, but, unfortunately, only wrote the first of the three parts into which he purposed to divide his book. This first part, 'A narrative of the Operations of the Right Division of the Canadian Army,' which Richardson himself accompanied, appeared in 1842, and is probably the best account extant of the exciting action fought by the gallant Sir Isaac Brock and General Henry Procter on the Canadian frontier. Mr. Casselman has done well to reprint it; and he has carried out his work with extreme diligence, adding numerous notes, plans, illustrations, portraits, and official documents, and prefixing to his volume by far the fullest life of Richardson that has yet been written. He also provides a bibliography of Richardson's literary remains, and an excellent index. From such books as this one is able to perceive that the devotion of the colonies to the crown and empire is no new thing, and that ninety years ago Canada was as ready to sacrifice blood and treasure in order to keep the flag flying as she is to-day. The splendid story, it may be feared, is already in danger of being forgotten by the mother country; and, although Richardson's history possesses, of course, peculiar interest for Canadians, it is not less deserving of the attention of all Englishmen who are proud of the achievements of their race.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE WEBB ON SHAKESPEARE OR BACON.

The most interesting of recent contributions to the question—Was Shakespeare a Myth?—is 'The Mystery of William Shakespeare: a Summary of Evidence,' by his Honour Judge T. Webb, published by Messrs. Longmans. We are glad to see that a judge has taken up the matter, and although we cannot say we are convinced by his arguments that the Baconians are right in their claims, we are confirmed in our view that the question is—a question.

The following extract from Chapter X., entitled 'The Conclusion of the Whole Matter,' states the purpose of the book, and suggests that in the Author's opinion there is considerable room for doubt as to whether the SHAKESPEARE of tradition was the author of the works associated with his name.

'In the present state of the Shakespearian question, two men are presented to us as claiming to be SHAKESPEARE,—the one the young man who came up from Stratford, and became a London player, the other the son of a Lord Keeper, the nephew of a Lord Treasurer, the companion of Nobles, and the favourite of Princes; the one a man of obscure origin, of defective education, of degrading associations, and of mean employments, a man of whose personality we know next to nothing—the other a man of the world, a master of all the learning of his time, a scholar, a lawyer, and a man of science, a wit, a philosopher, and a poet, a man of acknowledged genius, and by universal admission one of the greatest of the sons of men. In the one case there is a startling contrast between the man as we know him and the works as we possess them; in the other, the works as we possess them and the man as we know him are in strict accord. And hence it is that in the latter case we are ready to infer the authorship of the works, because we recognise the qualifications of the man, while in the former we only attribute the qualifications to the man, because we regard him as the author of the works.

'Whichever side of the question we adopt, there are formidable difficulties in our way; but, as Dr. Johnson remarked, there are objections to a plenum, and there are objections to a vacuum, yet one or the other of them must be true. In the case of the authorship of the Shakespearian Plays, there are circumstances of difficulty which are common to both the candidates for this supreme distinction. As far as appearances go, neither of them claimed to be the author; neither of them published the immortal works; neither of them gave any directions for their publication; neither of them mentioned them in his will; and to all appearance, each of them was utterly insensible to their literary value, and each of them was utterly indifferent to their ulterior fate. The only difference between the two is this—that if the Player was the author of the Shakespearian Plays, he had every motive to proclaim the fact, while, if the Lawyer and the Statesman was the author, he had every reason to conceal it.'

PENCILS FROM STUMPS.

MANUFACTURERS COMPELLED TO SEEK STUMPS, OLD RAILS, AND SIMILAR TIMBER TO SUPPLY THE DEMAND.

A letter from Murfreesboro, Tenn., says: The Eagle Pencil Company is buying all the cedar stumps and old cedar rails procurable in this county and having them shipped to South Pittsburg, where its pencil mills are located. Hundreds of loads of this class of timber are being brought to this point for shipment. A two-horse load of the lumber is worth about an average price of $10. When the supply obtainable in this section is considered it will be seen that it will be a source of revenue to the landholders of much consequence, as there are tens of thousands of acres of land in this county on which there are millions of feet of lumber.

Heretofore these old stumps were considered in the light of nuisances, as the only means of ridding the land of them was by grubbing them up, since they are practically indestructible by the action of weather or time.

The rapid exhaustion of the forests of pencil timber presents the first phase of a problem in the manufacture of pencils which will prove troublesome to makers sooner or later. As yet nothing has been found to take the place of cedar as a casing for the lead. And the consumption of lead pencils increases so rapidly that some suitable substance will be absolutely essential before very long.

The pencil factory at Alton Park, Tenn., is approaching completion, and will be ready for operation within a few weeks.—American Stationer.

PERMANENT OFFICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS.

In the course of last March two circulars were sent by the Permanent Office of the International Congress of Publishers to the different Associations asking them if, in compliance with the prescriptions of the Congress, they would approach their respective Governments in order to obtain:

1. The repeal of customs duties on books, &c.
2. Certain improvements in the postal service, both with regard to the internal management and to the international intercourse.

At the same time the Associations were asked to let the Permanent Office know what steps they had taken in that direction, so as to enable it to support them by sending the Governments a circular note, which would show, besides, that similar steps were simultaneously being taken in the different countries.

Several Associations not yet having sent in their reply, the Permanent Office begs them to do so at the earliest date possible, so as not to delay the proceedings.

THE FROZEN VIPER.

(Æsop Enlightened.)

Congeaed was the snake,
And the husbandman saw it—
Concluded to thaw it
For charity's sake.

So into his pocket he stuck it with care,
And—late from the tavern—forgot it was there.

Uncertain is life!

Ere his homing was over,
A rascally rover

Drew nigh with a knife;

Said, 'Hold up your hands? Thanks—you're awfully kind!'

And went through his pockets for what he could find.

The viper, thawed out

And restored to enjoyment,

For pleasant employment

Was casting about,

And seeing a finger invading his leath

Bit into the stranger for all he was worth.

And this was the last

Of the snake and the stranger:

The affable granger

Triumphantly passed.

Letters to the Editor

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

'A LITTLE HARD.'

DEAR SIR,—We have before us your Coronation number, containing a large quantity of reviews of Coronation books. Does it not seem a little hard that our own book, 'The Coronation of a King,' by M. F. Johnston, should not be reviewed among your Coronation literature? Several of the leading papers have said that ours is the best book on the subject now published, and we are very sorry to find it omitted from your list. You will find it advertised on page 628, and we are now sending you a copy in case you might care to say something about it in a subsequent number.

Faithfully yours,

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD.

ARTHUR WAUGH,

Managing Director.

[Hard is not the word for it; we announced that we would notice Coronation

Literature in our Coronation number not only in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR but by circular direct to the publishers. Everything sent in time was noticed, and it is doubly hard to be reproached by Mr. Waugh for not noticing what was not sent! However, we hope this little additional advertisement will make up for it.—ED.]

TRANSLATIONS OF CLARK RUSSELL'S NOVELS.

SIR,—Translations of Clark Russell's novels are not restricted to the Dutch and German. I have in my possession a copy of 'My Danish Sweetheart,' by W. Clark Russell, translated into Danish under the title of 'Min Danske Brud,' by C. L. With, Kjöbenhavn. Forlagt af J. H. Schuboths Boghandel, Graebes Bogtrykkeri, 1892. As this author's characteristic is markedly British and maritime, it would be interesting to know if his books have found their way into French, Spanish, and Italian translations.

Yours truly,

A. C. K.

High Town, Hereford:

TRADE CHANGES, &c.

The business carried on by the late Mr. Henry Robinson, 46 Fishergate, Preston, has now been taken over entirely by his daughter, Miss E. C. Robinson, who has managed the business for some years.

Mr. Fredk. Hall, the esteemed manager for many years of Messrs. J. & T. Spencer, of Leicester, sails to-day for Cape Town for Messrs. Darter Brothers.

In consequence of the present premises (No. 99) being required for Strand improvements, the International Advertising Agency are removing to the first floor of 9 Strand, W.C.

Mr. J. S. Peters, fifteen years with Messrs. Combridge & Co., of Birmingham and Nottingham, is now opening an establishment of his own at 25 Pier Street, Aberystwyth, as bookseller, stationer, and fancy goods dealer.

AMERICAN 'PRUDISHNESS.'

In the face of foreign criticism, and in the face of one's own dismay at existing conditions with regard to divorce, we still sympathise with the retort administered to an alien critic of our people, who had declared, in private conversation, that America seemed to be afflicted with the disease of prudishness. The answer was somewhat in these words (the incident occurred several years ago): 'Yes, probably it is true that Americans are prudish, but considering the revelations that have recently taken place concerning certain circles in London, and considering the condition of a good part of the Parisian stage and of French literature, I, for one, am willing that we should pay that price for the knowledge that, on the whole, Americans are the decentest people, in regard to the relations of the sexes, on the face of the globe.'—From an editorial in the June Century on 'Divorce.'

EARLY PAPER MARKS.

We have already referred in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR to the interesting notes and illustrations of paper marks in Mr. Harold Bayley's recently published work, 'The Tragedy of Francis Bacon.' In the Paper Makers' Circular he has some further notes on the subject, from which we take the following extracts. They are from a reply to criticisms of Mr. A. F. Calvert.

'I restrict my comments to what Mr. Calvert has to say on the subject of paper marks.

'He asserts the interesting fact that Caxton's "Golden Legend" contains fifty different designs. I have not the opportunity of verifying this statement, but if it be true it seems to me to be a point, if anything, in my favour. Mr. Calvert will scarcely contend that Caxton ran paper accounts with fifty different paper makers, and if these marks be not trade marks, what are they?

'Mr. Calvert himself answers the question, but in a manner so cryptic that I am not clear as to his exact meaning. "The symbols," says he, "are allusive, heraldic, or canting, mostly emblematic or in rebus form. That is all." I am quite content with Mr. Calvert's "all," and as in this case he voices my opinion I find nothing to refute.

'The Pilot, however, holds a totally different theory. It admits that many early marks "take very curious shapes," but suggests as an explanation that "the workmen varied them for their own amusement," a proposition so peculiarly puerile that I should have considered it not worthy of notice had not one of the organs of the paper trade dignified it by its approval.

'With regard to the "Fleur-de-lis" Mr. Calvert asks: "What more natural for the paper maker Lile than to take the Fleur-de-lis for his trade symbol?" Whether this is conjecture, or whether Mr. Calvert possesses evidence of the existence of a paper maker Lile, I cannot tell. If he maintains that the water-marked Fleur-de-lis is to be taken as evidence of this individual's manufacture, "paper maker Lile" must have possessed an exceptionally excellent business, supplying not only the whole of Europe for upwards of 500 years, but even many English hand-made mills to-day. There is, however, clear evidence that although the Fleur-de-lis may sometimes have been employed conventionally, or from force of ignorant custom, it was originally used and revered as a religious symbol—that of the Trinity. I send for your inspection—and for reproduction, if you deem the subject of sufficient interest—both water-marked and printed examples where the designer has depicted the sacred symbol with a halo.

'I think it cannot but be admitted as an unquestionable fact that from the earliest days of paper-making, until the year 1750, or thereabouts, paper marks were, almost without exception, either religious, philosophical, or masonic emblems. From 1750 onwards they begin to become trade signs. Mere dull and obstinate denial does not disprove this fact, and it is to be desired that the paper-making craft should endeavour to find a right explanation. I appeal to the more intelligent members not to be content with facts at secondhand, or to regard the subject as one fit only for the bookworm or the crank, but to inquire into it themselves, or to join hands with me for further investigation.

'It may be that the orthodox theory is after all the right one—that it was customary for every little jobbing printer to distribute his orders among forty or fifty different makers. Or that this diversity of watermark does not denote otherwise than that the paper all emanated from the same mill, but that the mediæval paper makers derived an innocent and childish joy in ripping their moulds to destruction in order to vary the marks "for their own amusement." I confess that to my mind the suggestion savours of absurdity.

HAROLD BAYLEY.

Notices of Books

From Mr. Howard Wilford Bell.—'University Magazines and their Makers: a Paper read before the Sette of Odd Volumes,' by Harry Currie Marillier. This is an interesting little work, which can only appeal, however, to a limited circle of readers. The author seems to have been at great pains to collect his information, and interspersed throughout his pages are many pleasant recollections, with here and there a happy quotation. In only one instance have we been able to detect an error, and this only of minor importance. There was a magazine at Christ's College, Cambridge, long before the present periodical was started. It was entitled the Fleur de Lys, and existed for some years, eventually coming to grief through a dispute with the college authorities, whose actions the editors had presumed to criticise. It first made its appearance, if we remember rightly, in the early seventies.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'The way of Escape,' by Graham Travers (Margaret Todd, M.D.). It seems almost ungenerous to say of a novel from which we have derived so much pleasure that it fails to realise the promise of the opening chapters. But Vera Carruthers, whose bright originality and pretty waywardness form the features that first take the attention of the reader, develops into a character of infinitely greater stability and yet distinctly less piquancy. When Giles Willoughby, fresh from his medical honours at Edinburgh University, and already pledged to a quiet, sensible Scotch lassie, first meets with Vera at the picturesque little resort on the shores of the Mediterranean, our heart, like his, is completely taken captive by the dainty, winsome creature, and as we follow her through subsequent troubles, when, deserted by her lover, she bravely struggles to atone, and to help her younger half-brothers and sisters, though our interest is in no way lessened, the exquisite charm of the introductory episodes seems to have disappeared. Idylism has descended to pure matter of fact, and our thoughts are brought from romance to the dealings of the ordinary everyday world. The story is excellent, told with a control over the imagination that is rare nowadays, and yet never wanting in interest. Good as her previous novels have been, the author has never depicted a more attractive character than Vera Carruthers, nor has she ever been more thoroughly consistent in her treatment.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited.—'The World before Abraham,' by H. G. Mitchell. This is an attempt—and a very successful one—to treat the book of Genesis from the 'view-point of modern scholarship.' Eleven chapters only are dealt with, but Professor Mitchell fills three hundred pages with his investigations, arguments, and conclusions. The work is divided into three parts: the Pentateuch, an Analysis of Gen. i.-xi., and a translation with comments. We have found the first part most interesting: it appeals to the general reader with great force. The comments are extremely suggestive and deep, and are undoubtedly a valuable contribution to the higher criticism.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Clare Nugent,' a novel, by E. O'Connor Morris. The Nugents were an old Irish family so hopelessly in debt that their estate of Kinvaragh came into the Incumbered Estates Court and was bought by Mr. Josiah Cropper, a London solicitor, who dies soon after the story begins, leaving Kinvaragh House with its eight hundred acres to Miss Blanche Clinton, his grand-niece, a blonde beauty of eighteen. The Mr. Nugent who had owned the property had been so heart-broken at the idea of leaving it that Mr. Cropper asked him to stay on and act as his steward, and he did this the more willingly because he himself had no notion how to manage Irish tenants. However, about twelve years before the opening of the novel Mr. Nugent was suspected of robbing his employer of £10,000, and, spite of all asseverations to the contrary, the assertions of the sub-agent Finnegan, who had kept the books, and of the steward Burke are believed, and, although Mr. Cropper does not prosecute him, Mr. Nugent leaves for England. Disgraced and discredited, he takes the name of Newton, and tries to drown his disgrace in drink, to which he falls a victim. His only son Fulke goes to Canada, while the widow and two daughters, Clare and Kathleen, go to Beeching, a south-coast watering place, where Clare becomes a professional pianist and Kathleen a daily governess. The Hon. Mrs. Percival gives a musical 'at-home,' and Clare is engaged to play. Her playing and accompanying of Blanche Clinton in a song and her beauty make a favourable impression on those present, and especially on Mrs. Percival's stepson, Hugh Percival, African traveller and bagger of big game, who has written some successful books of travel. Blanche Clinton sets her cap at this lion among the ladies, and asks if he has ever travelled in Ireland, which opening affords an opportunity for being communicative as to her prospective Irish inheritance of Kinvaragh, and as to the Nugents and their disgrace. This is overheard by Clare, who is standing near. She almost faints and Percival springs to her assistance, but she motions him away and leaves the house. Soon after this old Mr. Cropper dies; Blanche Clinton and her aunt, Miss Cropper, must now go to Kinvaragh, and ask Clare to accompany them as companion. This she consents to do in the hope that she may be able to clear her father's memory from the stigma resting on it. The scene changes to Ireland, and here the interest increases and intensifies until the very satisfactory end. It is in this part of the book that the best drawn and most amusing characters appear. The author well maintains the reputation gained by her first story, 'Killeen,' in this delightful novel of Irish life as it now is, and Judge O'Connor Morris—called by such an authority as Mr. Lecky 'one of Ireland's foremost literary men'—may be congratulated on the well deserved success of the daughter who dedicates this book to him.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'El Hombú,' by W. H. Hudson. Mr. Hudson has brought together, in this second volume of the publishers' 'Greenback' series, four tales of life and adventure in those vast plains of South America known as the Pampas. The story which gives its title to the volume is that of a house which had once stood in the shadow of an ombú tree. The story-teller is an old man named Nicandro, who could remember and narrate the life of every person he had known in his native place. When we read that 'it is said sorrow and at last ruin come upon the house on whose roof the shadow of the ombú tree falls,' it may be supposed that this story is anything but gay. The same may be said of the other three tales which complete the volume, which are 'The Story of the Piebald Horse,' 'Nina Diablo,' and 'Marta Riquelme.' But life on the Pampas is grave and not gay, and is accurately mirrored in Mr. Hudson's stories, which are graphically and dramatically told.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Kentons,' by W. D. Howells. Though we have lost none of our admiration and interest for Mr. Howells' keen analysis of American character, we confess to being a little disappointed in the motif of his present novel. Ellen Kenton, the girl round whom the chief interest centres, is almost an exasperating character, with whom it is impossible to feel any sympathy. In the country town of Tuskingum (Ohio), where her parents live, she falls senselessly in love with a highly objectionable young newspaper reporter, and to take her out of the scope of his influence the Kentons remove to New York and subsequently arrange a visit to Europe. Ellen's attitude in regard to this fellow Bittridge can only arouse a feeling of irritation, with a corresponding vexation that her parents should be so weak as not to adopt a sterner method of treatment with her. Eventually, after numerous hesitations, she sails with the party to Europe, and her attachment for the reporter is cured by a young clergyman on board, of no especial merits or attractions, for whom the parents seem to have angled rather vulgarly. All the Kentons are apparently wanting in character and backbone, except perhaps the two youngest children. Even the eldest son, who cowhides Bittridge for insulting his father, retreats to his bed after the deed, ashamed that he should so have demeaned himself. Curiously enough, the reporter stands out as quite the most distinct personality in the story. He is a feature of the time, both in the States and this country, and therefore perhaps strikes our attention more readily—a man light and shallow, with unbounded confidence in himself, no modesty and no reverence. Judge Kenton said of him that 'he did not mind his push; the fellow had his way to make, and he had to push; but he did mind his being all push, and his having come out of the country with as little simplicity as if he had passed his whole life in the city.' But, then, foolish Ellen's father, truth to tell, was a little afraid of the man.

From Verlag von G. Hedeler, Leipzig.—'Gesetze über das Urheberrecht in allen Ländern nebst den darauf bezüglichen Internationalen Verträgen und den Bestimmungen über das Verlagsrecht.' Zweite Auflage. Durchgesehen von Prof. Ernst Röhrlisberger, Bern. The second edition of this useful compilation of the Copyright Laws of all countries, together with International Literary Conventions and Copyright Provisions, contains the verbatim German text of about 250 laws, treaties, directions, &c. It has been revised by Prof. Ernst Röhrlisberger, who, as Secretary of the Bernese International Bureau for Intellectual Property, is recognised as the authority on matters of copyright, and has been brought up to the very latest date. The use of the work is very materially facilitated by a strictly alphabetical arrangement of the respective States. Although the contents fill 418 closely-printed pages, the type is clear and legible, and the volume easily handled. Such a fund of information on the important subject of International Copyright as is here brought together must render this work indispensable to publishers everywhere.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'After the Resurrection,' by the Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D.D. Readers of former volumes of sermons by Dr. Maclaren will expect much from this new work by that gifted preacher, and they will most certainly not be disappointed. For, of the twenty-six discourses before us, there is none which does not bear the impress of the preacher's cultured intellect, wide range of knowledge in secular as well as religious literature, keen insight into spiritual things, and affectionate earnestness in exhortation and encouragement. As the title indicates, very many of these sermons have for their subject-matter the deeds and words of our Lord during the forty days following His resurrection; but some treat of other matters, and among these are two admirable addresses on the life of Queen Victoria. One other sermon, entitled 'The King with Ten Thousand,' is more than ordinarily interesting; firstly, because of its subject, that of a brave man steadfastly purposed to lead a good and noble life in Christ Jesus; and, secondly, because it forms one of a series of annual sermons delivered to the young by the venerable preacher, who tells us: 'It is fifty-four years since the first of them was preached, and each year makes it more probable that this may be the last.' Every reader of this earnest and affectionate exhortation to young women and men about to embark on the stream of life must wish the preacher may be spared to deliver many more such fine sermons as this, which abounds in passages of burning eloquence.

From Messrs. Houlston & Sons.—'The Rise of British West Africa,' by Claude George, of the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sierra Leone. In five parts. Part I., 96 pp. royal 8vo. This first part of a work which promises to be of considerable value, as it is of undoubted interest, opens with an Introduction comprising a history of the discovery of Western Africa from the earliest voyage made by Pharaoh Necho, B.C. 600, and the colonising expedition of Hanno of Carthage, B.C. 450, until the English voyages of Tudor times. Chapter I. tells of the discovery of Sierra Leone, first known to Englishmen in 1562, when that pirate and freebooter Sir John Hawkins landed on the peninsula, making free use of fire and sword, captured three hundred natives, and carried them off to the West Indies, where he sold them as slaves, and thus gained the unenviable distinction of having founded British African slavery. Other items of interest in Chapters II. to VII., with which this part ends, are the cowardly and destructive attack on Sierra Leone by French pirates in 1794; the rising of the settlers against the Sierra Leone Company in 1880; and the rising of the Temucs in 1801. A very interesting account is given of the Bananas Islands as told in 1799 by old Addo, one of the first of the Company's agents, who was then about 110 years of age. There is also much mention of M.M. Zachary Macaulay and Thomas Gisborne Babington, and of the son of the first-named, Thomas Babington, afterwards Lord Macaulay.

From Mr. John Lane.—'In my Vicarage Garden and Elsewhere,' by Rev. Henry N. Ellacombe, M.A., Vicar of Bitton, Gloucestershire. As the seventeen chapters which go to make up this gossip book on floriculture have already appeared in various weekly papers, we might be excused for passing it over as a reprint. It would, however, be unfair to omit calling attention to a work from which readers may derive so much pleasure and profit. Never surely was there a more enthusiastic gardener than Mr. Ellacombe, who would, like Bacon, have perpetual spring in his garden; and, when writing of the flowers of early spring, says, 'To the real lover of plants, spring lasts from the first of January to the thirty-first of December, and spring flowers are to be found all through the year.' Space fails to enumerate the various subjects ably discussed in this book, every page of which shows that its author is a man of taste and culture.

From the same.—'Florilegium Latinum,' edited by Francis St. John Thackeray, M.A., F.S.A., and Edward Daniel Stone, M.A. Translations of modern poets into Latin verse are always interesting, and here we have a collection of such translations done by Dr. Yelverton Tyrrell, Hon. Edward Lyttelton, M.A., Sir Richard Jebb, and many other well-known scholars. The poets selected for translation are all Victorian, and include such widely different writers as Bret Harte, Emily Brontë, Emerson, Whittier, Swinburne, John Davidson, and Kipling. The English and Latin versions are printed on opposite pages so that comparison is easy, and there is both an index of authors and index of first lines.

From Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd.—'Patricia of the Hills,' by Charles Kennett Burrow. 'Patricia of the Hills' is a thoroughly good Irish story, which is no slight commendation, because few people are better storytellers than the Irish. Patricia Shannon, the heroine, is a thorough womanly creation of whom any novelist might be proud. She charms us from her first appearance at the very beginning, which is her last appearance at her father's house, Kilmorna, when that provident schemer, Patrick Shannon, gives his final dinner party, until we regretfully bid her adieu at Tramenia. 'This last little affair to-night,' her father jokingly says to Dick Charteris, the hero and narrator of the tale, 'was really given by the creditors; I had to make the men drunk to do it. Nothing is mine now.' Dick asks him if he is going away. He replies that he and Patricia are going, and that he hopes to lay the foundations of a new fortune. When asked how he is going to make a new fortune at his age, he rejoins: 'We have Patricia's voice.' What this means for Patricia is sympathetically told in that part of the book devoted to her triumphs and bitter trials in London, where much of the action takes place and where the heroine's success as a singer is dazzling. It is in the larger portion of the book, where the scene is laid in Ireland, that the most interesting scenes and characters are to be found. Of the many attractive female characters—and what females can be more attractive than those of Ireland?—are the hero's mother, Mrs. Charteris (who tells that uncanny story of the Black Dog), her beautiful little old friend, the Countess of Milltown, sweet Mary Shannon, Patricia's sister, and pretty Ellen Sheehan. Of the male characters there are some strikingly original personages, such as the old Earl of Milltown, 'well-born, well-bred, honest according to his lights, and inflexibly just with that justice which never felt the pulse of true charity'; his son, Lord Clogher, a big, masterful, and contradictory character, most thoroughly Irish; James Sheehan, the poacher; the hero, Dick Charteris; and last, and perhaps best, of all, Father Philip Shannon, parish priest of Carmore. We can promise those who take up this animated narrative real enjoyment in the reading of it. It deserves to be read and not skimmed, for it is well written, and has not a dull page in it.

From Mr. John Long.—'Something in the City,' by Florence Warden. Those who know Miss Warden's methods will scarcely require to be told that in the majority of her stories there is a mystery. In the present instance it is very adroitly kept up to the end, and as there is plenty of movement in the narrative, incident following upon incident with almost kaleidoscopic rapidity, readers who are partial to sensational fiction may generally congratulate themselves on having a good time. All the interest arises through a certain gentleman, living at Hammersmith, who is 'something in the city.' His acquaintance is first made by a widow lady, who takes the house next door, of which he is landlord. She also engages, on his recommendation, a curious freak of a servant girl whom he is willing to relinquish from his own household. He is a strange man, this Mr. Justican, calm and self-possessed, but in nothing so strange as the associates he keeps and the apparent mastery he has over them. What it all means is only disclosed, as we have said, at the end of the book. The story, viewed as an effort in sensationalism, opens very appropriately with a murder, the body of a dead man being discovered at the bottom of the widow's garden—indeed, one of the most remarkable circumstances for those who can steel themselves to reflection during the exciting course of the story is that this unfortunate lady did not quit her house and run away long before the elucidation of matters, in perfect terror of her surroundings. Miss Warden's novel, which seems to us much better written and constructed than the ordinary run of her works, will keep the reader thoroughly interested from beginning to end.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—

'The Call to Arms, 1900-1901: or a Review of the Imperial Yeomanry Movement, and some Subjects connected Therewith,' by Henry Seton-Karr, M.P. Nothing during the whole course of the war has so forcibly testified to the inherent stability of the nation as the part played by the Imperial Yeomanry. Theirs, indeed, is a record of which any body of men may well feel proud. In this volume Mr. Seton-Karr gives an interesting, well-studied account of how the Imperial Yeomanry first came to be enrolled, and the work performed, more especially by the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Battalions Sharpshooters Corps at the front. 'Amateur soldiers,' remarks the author, 'they have been called, and amateur soldiers they may be, but they have shown that the civilian manhood of these islands, in the end of the nineteenth and the beginning of the twentieth centuries, has in no way deteriorated in physical endurance and military capacity from the British manhood of bygone times, which built up the empire which is now being consolidated and increased.' The second part of the book is devoted to a consideration of the army rifle, and its value to such a corps as the Imperial Yeomanry is very impartially summed up; while the third part consists of a record of a conversation between a stay-at-home philosopher and two fighting men back from the war, in which the first-named, by a series of questions and comments, elicits from his companions an expression of their opinion on the cause of the war, the way in which it has been carried out, and the attitude displayed by Boer sympathisers at home. There are also a number of appendices. The book is very capably and soberly written, and will be read with none the less interest now that the war is happily a thing of the past, and people have leisure without heat and passion to consider its bearings.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—

'The Times History of the War in South Africa, 1899-1902,' edited by L. S. Amery. Vol. II. If the preceding volume of this important work was interesting, it may confidently be stated that the present instalment is much more so. For one thing, we get deeper, as it were, into the actual conflict, and are animated by the excitement of the contending armies. The first volume, it will be remembered, traced the political causes of the South African war from the British acquisition of Cape Colony down to the ultimatum presented to the British Government by the Transvaal on October 9, 1899—that is, to the actual commencement of hostilities; the present volume takes up the history for the first three months of fighting, from the expiration of the ultimatum down to the battle of Colenso, and also gives some account, not only of the preparations made for war on both sides before the outbreak of hostilities, but of 'the historical development, organisation, and chief characteristics of the two widely different military systems which the breakdown of the political situation suddenly left face to face.' Throughout, the endeavour has always been to present a plain unvarnished story, critical it may be, but distinguished by strict impartiality and a close adherence to accuracy. The first two chapters are devoted to a consideration respectively of the British and Boer military systems. Under these headings such questions as the recruiting for the British army, its composition, material, training, and tactics, the Boer policy, their commando organisation, official and unofficial training, &c., are debated, and a general comparison between the two forces is made. The succeeding chapter refers to the eve of the war, the general disposition of the combatants, the preparations made by this country, and the Boer plan of campaign. Henceforth, with the invasion of Natal, we are in the thick of the turmoil, and in the nine following sections are treated to descriptions of the battles of Talana Hill, Elandslaagte, and Ladysmith, the break-up of the Army Corps, the Natal entanglement, Lord Methuen's march to Modder River, and the fighting at Stormberg, Magersfontein, and Colenso. Naturally, great interest, considering the trend of recent events, will attach to what is said about the last-named battle. The mistakes made at this stage of the war are mercilessly exposed, and it is pointed out in regard to the preliminary manoeuvres that 'nothing is more astonishing than the contempt the Boer Generals showed for their opponents, except that that contempt was almost invariably justified by the event.' The volume, which is of the greatest attraction and importance, is illustrated with numerous photogravure and other portraits, maps, and battle-plans, the latter enabling the reader to follow the course of events with a much clearer realisation of the situation than he would otherwise have. Among the portraits are the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Wolseley, General Piet Joubert, Lieut.-General Sir George White, General Lucas Meyer, the Hon. Sir W. F. Hely Hutchinson, Colonel Yule, Major-General Sir W. Penn Symons, Major-General Hildyard, Lieut.-General Lord Methuen, Major-General Sir W. F. Gatacre, and General the Right Hon. Sir Redvers H. Buller.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—

'Greek Prose Composition,' by S. O. Andrew, M.A. In his preparation of this little work Mr. Andrew has exercised a wise discretion. Both in constructions and in language he has limited himself as far as possible to the mature Attic. In the phrase-books that boys are nowadays encouraged to make for themselves, 'old Attic,' as he points out, 'from Thucydides and Pan-hellenic from Xenophon, tags from the Tragedians and precosities from Lucian, jostle together and produce compositions which can only be compared to Baboo English,' and the only remedy for this, in his opinion, is a discriminating study of Attic models, and a refraining on the young scholar's part from the imitation of mannerisms, from doing pieces 'in the style of Thucydides,' or 'in the style of Plato.' There are nearly two hundred exercises in the book, the advantages of which are much increased by a very complete vocabulary. No previous volume in 'Macmillan's Greek Course' is more deserving of cordial appreciation.

From Mr. John Murray.—'We are Seven: Half Hours on the Stage, Grave and Gay,' by Hamilton Aidé. We are not quite sure if these little plays, with possibly one exception, are remarkable instances of stage craft, but of their interest in book form there can be slight question. The author possesses the invaluable gift of a facile dextrous style, enabling him to depict the whole force of a situation in a few pointed, concise sentences. The construction in each case is of the flimsiest, and what attracts the reader is the exchange of thought and delicate display of emotion. As the title indicates, there are both humorous and tragic pieces in the volume, and of the first we are inclined to like best 'A Lesson in Acting,' which has been played, we understand, by Mrs. Kendal and Mr. Gilbert Hare. The other variety is most notably represented by 'A Gleam in Darkness,' the story of a refined, highly sensitive woman who, tortured beyond endurance, murdered her husband at the very moment when he contemplated doing the same by her, and is eventually tracked to the lonely place by the sea shore where she has retreated, and taken into custody. But previous to her arrest she has entertained a bright, boyish midshipman—a perfect stranger to her—to breakfast, and has told him something of her history; and this is the 'Gleam' referred to.

From Messrs. James Nisbet & Co., Ltd.—'The Story of a Mother,' by Jane Helen Findlater. The standard of modern novel-writing is so high that a reviewer's duty of constantly praising becomes somewhat monotonous, and here again we have a novel that is unusually clever. Mrs. Hoséason has three children, but the story is only intimately concerned with one of these—Zachary. The boy is a clever youngster—plucky, wilful, and sick unto death of the eternal preaching of his father, a minister of the Church of Scotland; so he runs away from home, and a few weeks later, with the consent of his parents, travels on the Continent in company with Lord Ruxton. Meanwhile, Lord Ruxton falls in love with the lad's mother. Zachary is intended for the ministry by his father, and the boy is sent against his will to Aberdeen to study theology. His father then has a stroke and dies, the family are reduced to poverty, and Zach begins to work in a flour-mill. One night, however, he disappears, and it is supposed he is drowned. Lord Ruxton and Mrs. Hoséason then marry, and Zach returns sixteen or seventeen years later with the story of how he had been taken to Jamaica, and sold there as a slave. That is but a bare outline of the plot, but it will be seen at once that it contains no element of originality; but the charm of the book lies in its character-sketches and in the natural and spontaneous dialogue. The writing is very unequal, and occasionally one's interest flags. The characters are often wilfully and unnecessarily inconsistent; and though the story happened nearly one hundred years ago, it is modern in spirit and tone. However, it is the work of a writer of no ordinary talent, and we shall be glad to see further work by Miss Findlater.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The One Before,' by Barry Pain. With eighty-seven illustrations by Tom Browne. Mr. Ernest Saunders Bailey, a gentleman of many but mostly futile occupations, and of independent means, his father having left him a fortune of three thousand a year made out of soap, is, nevertheless, remarkably stingy, and continually cuts and contrives to reduce his household expenses to the narrowest possible limits. This is especially the case at the opening of the story, when young James Havern, a relative of Mrs. Bailey, is staying with him as his guest. Mrs. Bailey, a kindly woman, whose common sense was always doing battle with her excessive belief in her husband and was always being vanquished, tells Ernest that the cook says the lamb will not do minced for luncheon; but Ernest thinks it will do very well—with management. 'Tell cook to put the mince on toast, thick toast, with poached eggs on the top . . . Yes, we will put the pressed beef on the sideboard. There is no occasion to mention it. If James wishes for it he will ask for it. He is like that.' When, after the host has taken offence at a little pleasantry on his guest's part, James returns to the flat at Kensington, occupied by his uncle, Mr. Nathaniel Brookes, the conversation turns on his visit to Mr. Bailey, on that gentleman's stinginess and unamiability, and on Miss Hilda Derriford, daughter of an old friend of James's uncle, with whom James is in love, but to whom he fears to tell his love. Suddenly Mr. Brookes exclaims that he has got the very thing to redeem Ernest Saunders Bailey. What he wants is 'The One Before.' It is a ring which has been given to Mr. Brookes, who was a great traveller, by a friend when on his death-bed at Seville. This ring, of antique workmanship in gold and bronze, is inscribed, 'Sahib-i-dirina,' which, roughly rendered, is 'The One Before,' and possesses the power of transferring personality. The wearer acquires the character and temperament of the one who last wore it. Mr. Brookes sends the ring to Mr. Bailey and dispatches a telegram in his nephew's name, asking him to wear it as a small memento of his delightful visit. Mr. Bailey, however, looks upon this gift as an insult, and declares he shall return it. But his wife protests that this would lead to a family quarrel, and says she has taken a fancy to the ring. Whereupon Mr. Bailey for once gives way, and tells her she may wear it. What strange and comical events result from the mysterious power of 'The One Before' may be imagined by those familiar with Mr. Barry Pain's inventive faculty and skill in story-telling, but can only be realised by reading this amusing book, the effect of which is vastly aided by Mr. Tom Browne's clever illustrations.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Strange Adventures of John Smith,' by William Henry Hudson. The John Smith of this story is a young man not particularly gifted with brains and of a highly romantic temperament. Being greatly disgusted with his commonplace name, the nature of which admits of no chance of distinction, he changes it to Fitzhugh Vespasian Smith, and from this moment a series of very remarkable adventures befall him. The first of these happens on the Metropolitan Railway, and results in his acquaintance with a remarkably pretty girl, who completely takes his susceptible heart in her keeping. In addition to her good looks and captivating address, there is an air of mystery about her which, in the eyes of the imaginative shipping clerk, only adds to her charm. Developments ensue, and poor John Smith goes about in fear of his life. He is next welcomed as a brother by a band of conspirators, and only escapes from serious disaster by the aid of the girl who, in the first place, was employed to ensnare him. Mr. Hudson would have done better, we think, if he had adopted a more consistent line of treatment. The story is half burlesque, half deadly earnest, and the interest suffers in consequence. It is a little difficult to conceive the liking of a clever high-spirited girl such as Victorine for a weak creature like John Smith, and the reason for her change from the rôle of temptress to that of fond lover seems inadequate, for there is nothing in John Smith's attitude towards the Anarchists to justify such a change—on the contrary, he appears more foolish and sentimental than ever. But the incidents of the story are lively enough, and will provide the reader with plenty of amusement.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Confessions of a Match-making Mother,' by Lillias Campbell Davidson. There is a felicitous completeness about this book, seeing that the match-making mamma, having by dexterous manoeuvring disposed of her eight daughters, herself gets married again to a widower with a family, and is thus endowed with the power of carrying on her favourite pursuit for many years to come. It must be confessed that in her successful diplomacy good luck plays no insignificant part. The member of Parliament, the domesticated widower whose house-keeper has been bribed to neglect him, the High Church curate whose sympathies are won because the special daughter designed for him is forced to eat meat on a Friday—these, with the five other victims, fall a prey to the bait laid for them in a way that is marvellous. But the book in many of its aspects is highly amusing, and should afford the reader many a hearty laugh.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Limited.—'A Modern Miracle,' by M. McD. Bodkin, K.C. If you are writing a sensational story, never spoil the effect for want of a little extra colouring. Such apparently is the opinion of the author of 'A Modern Miracle,' and accordingly the narrative perfectly teems with extraordinary incident. To explain it all would be an impossibility in the limited space at our command, but we may say that two electrical scientists—the one a knave, the other an honest man and friend of the hero—are pitted against each other, and in the course of their antagonism produce a series of mechanical contrivances that are thoroughly startling. For pure roguery, too, we should like to be introduced—in fiction—to a greater expert than the solicitor, Randal Thorncroft, who, however, has no hand in the electrical surprises that his dupe, Steve Curson, produces. Their machinations are designed to deprive the hero, Miles Broader, not only of the property bequeathed to him by his father, but of the girl to whom he is devotedly attached. Happily, matters right themselves—or are righted with admirable dexterity by Mr. Bodkin—and the reader, after passing through a number of scenes that allow him no time for sober reflection, ultimately finds himself in possession of his faculties again. There is not much depth in Mr. Bodkin's work, but as a portraiture of villainy and villainous ways it is certainly highly entrancing.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'An Introduction to Dermatology,' by Norman Walker, M.D. We are not surprised that the success of this work has called for a second edition, since the knowledge it displays, coupled with the exceptionally clear manner of its expression, is bound to recommend it to the notice of the student. Many additional illustrations are given in the present edition, and in other respects the book has been revised and expanded.

NEW EDITIONS.—From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited, we receive Part 1 of a new and enlarged edition of 'Familiar Wild Flowers,' by F. E. Hulme, F.S.A., containing ten beautifully-coloured specimens with descriptive text. Such a work is always welcome, but never more so than now, when the field flowers, rather late to display their charms owing to the cold winds, are in full bloom everywhere.—Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son send us a new, revised, and illustrated edition of that excellent work, first published in 1899, entitled 'Divine Dual Government: a Key to the Bible, to Evolution, and to Life's Enigmas,' by William Woods Smyth, Fellow of the Medical Society, London.—Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh, have published a second edition of the 'Elementary Text-Book of Zoology,' by Arthur T. Masterman, M.A., Lecturer on Zoology and Botany in the School of Medicine of the Royal Colleges, Edinburgh. This new edition has been thoroughly revised, and fifty new figures, as well as a short description of Rotifera added.—Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster issue the 485th thousand of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's humorous and pithy volume of good advice to workaday folk called 'John Ploughman's Talk,' than which few works of the kind have achieved such a well-deserved popularity.—Mr. Arthur Lovell sends us the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, of 'Ars Vivendi: or the Art of acquiring Mental and Bodily Vigour,' by D. C. W. (Arthur Lovell).—Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has brought out a Free Trade Edition of Mr. John Morley's interesting 'Life of Richard Cobden,' which Free Traders and Protectionists alike may read with pleasure and profit, and, having done so, will look forward to the treat in store for them when Mr. Morley's 'Life of Gladstone' shall appear. This is what Cobden wrote to his brother Frederick about the G.O.M. on June 22, 1842: 'Peel is a Free-trader, and so are Ripon and Gladstone. The last was put in by the Puseyites, who thought they had insinuated the wedge, but now they complain that he has been quite absorbed by Peel, which is the fact. Gladstone makes a clever aide-de-camp to Peel, but is nothing without him.'

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

P.M.G.—'A BRILLIANT NOVEL.'

THE INCONSEQUENCES OF SARA. By DANAË MAY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE says: 'It is always a pleasure to be able to give a good book a good welcome. . . . Her novel is one of the smartest and most amusing pieces of work that have appeared for some considerable time; her heroine the most delightful since Mr. Anthony Hope burst upon us with Dolly. . . . No more promising work has come from a woman writer since the tales of John Oliver Hobbes.'

LADIES' FIELD: 'It is a novel of undeniable cleverness.'

Publishers' Circular

'LORNA DOONE.'

It may be interesting once again, just on the issue of the fourth 50,000 of 'Lorna Doone' in the Sixpenny form, to repeat a few facts which may now be looked upon as of an historical character. As regards this Sixpenny edition I may say that Mr. Blackmore was for a long time averse to such an issue, but he at length yielded, and wrote me a characteristic letter, from which I give the following extract:—

'It would not surprise me much if you made a hit with the Sixpenny L. D., such is the thickheadedness of the many-headed If the other books, some of which are of a higher order than L. D., could be made to go, I might defy the few seasons yet before me. Vainly do I look for pears; but to know why there are none is or ought to be a comfort.'

His consent was given, however, on the understanding that the edition was to be limited to 150,000. These were issued some two or three years ago, and promptly sold out, and the fact of such an issue has probably already been almost forgotten by the public; at all events, as is the fashion nowadays, an urgent demand has again arisen for another Sixpenny Lorna. Accordingly the publishers have prepared an edition of 50,000 copies, which is now being issued with the satisfactory knowledge that every copy had been ordered beforehand, and doubtless the number of 150,000 will soon again be reached.

It is a curious fact that Mr. Blackmore always seemed to look upon the exceptional success of 'Lorna Doone' with a good deal of jealousy; for certainly, as may be gathered from the above quotation, he did not regard 'Lorna' as his best work. So long ago as 1879 he wrote to me about 'Mary Anerley':—

'The story is cast on a large scale, and written with even more than my usual care. A page a day is my maximum at present.* It is a very quiet tale so far, but will have plenty of incident. It will bear more resemblance to L. D. than any of my other works. I take to the poor thing all the more for her evil fortunes. But for you, "Lorna Doone" may never have seen the light; all the magazines rejected her Thank heaven! I have plenty of self-confidence, simply because I know good work when I see it. . . . You will say I am like the old woman whose illness was attributed to too much gin, and who proved instant that it was caused by too little. And I certainly do sympathise with unmitigated defiance, the which I hereby hurl at all who despise M. A. without seeing her.'

'Springhaven,' which is now announced for publication next month in the Sixpenny form, was, I have reason to believe, regarded by him as his masterpiece. I do not think, however, that this opinion of his own work is likely to dethrone 'Lorna Doone.' Unquestionably it is written, as the author said of it, on a higher level, and with equal dramatic and historical interest, for Napoleon's preparation at Boulogne for a descent on this country, his intrigues and personal secret interviews with Caryl Cairne, the marvellous adventures and hairbreadth escapes of Captain Scudamore, the personality of Nelson, and his frequent visits to his old friend, Admiral Darling, who meets with such a tragic end—all is told in a very charming and captivating style of which one never wearies. The volume is as full of stirring incident as 'Lorna Doone,' and the two heroines, Faith and Dolly Darling, are as bewitching as all Mr. Blackmore's female characters are.

Mr. Blackmore began his literary career as a poet. The first volume, published by Hardwick in 1864, was entitled 'The Fate of Franklin': it seems to have fallen quite dead. His first novel was 'Clara Vaughan': it first appeared in 1864 in Macmillan's Magazine, and then by the same firm in the usual three volumes. I well remember the late Mr. Alexander Macmillan's enthusiasm about that extraordinary story. It came into our hands and was first issued in one volume by Sampson Low, Marston & Co. in 1870. My first interview with Mr. Blackmore was with reference to a little work of his entitled 'Farm and Fruit of Old,' a translation of a portion of Virgil's 'Georgics,' which was afterwards expanded into a volume forming the complete 'Georgics.' We undertook the little shilling volume with some misgiving, but it was the beginning of our acquaintance, and led shortly afterwards to our bringing out 'Lorna Doone' (which was first published by us in 1869) and all Mr. Blackmore's other books, and to a continued personal friendship which only his death terminated.

Mr. Blackmore says in his preface to the illustrated edition, which was published in 1873:—

'What a lucky maid you are, my Lorna! When first you came from the Western Moors nobody cared to look at you; the leaders of the public taste "led none of it to make test of you." Having struggled to the light of day, through obstruction and repulses for a year and a half, you shivered in the cold corner without a sunray. Your native land disdained you, and America answered, "No child of mine." . . . Still a certain brave man, the late Sampson Low the younger, felt convinced that there was good in you, and standing by his convictions, as the English manner used to be, "She shall have another chance," he said; "we have lost a lot of money by her; I don't care if we lose some more." Accordingly, forth you came, poor Lorna, in a simple, pretty dress, small in compass, small in figure, smaller still in hope of life.

'But, oh but—let none of the many fairer ones who fail despond—a certain auspicious event occurred just then, and gave you golden wings. The literary public found your name akin to one which filled the air, and as graciously as royalty itself endowed you with imaginary virtues. So grand is the luck of time and name: failing which more solid beings melt into oblivion's depth.'

I have always regarded this reference to the marriage of the Marquis of Lorne as a cause for the waking up of 'Lorna Doone' as a little illusion on the part of Mr. Blackmore, arising out of his peculiar modesty—for certainly Lorna would have made her way without any such an accidental resemblance in name. We all had faith in her from the beginning. Her progress was slow at first, but always steady; she has held her own for a third of a century, and apparently means to go on doing so, as will be seen from the advertisement in this number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. This issue will be followed by a similar edition of 'Springhaven' and several others of Mr. Blackmore's novels. E. MARSTON.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A copy of the Coronation number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has been most graciously accepted by his Majesty the King.

'Records of Lumsden's Horse' is the title of a work announced by Messrs. Longmans. It is edited by Reginald Rankin, and will describe the services rendered by the force during the Boer war. It will be fully illustrated, and an interesting feature will be the details of the expenditure in equipping and maintaining this fine body of horsemen.

We are glad to note that a popular edition has just been published by Messrs. Cassell of 'With Nature and a Camera,' by R. Kearton, F.Z.S., most interestingly illustrated by Mr. C. Kearton. Several thousand copies of this work in its expensive form have already been called for. In this cheap edition one of the most interesting natural history books of modern times will be placed within general reach. A unique feature of the work is its series of 180 illustrations of wild birds and beasts, which are reproductions of photographs taken in every instance direct from nature by the author's brother.

His Majesty the King has been pleased most graciously to signify his acceptance of a copy of Mr. John Oxenham's new novel, 'John of Gerisau.' Her Majesty the Queen, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and the Duke of Coburg-Gotha have also accepted copies of Mr. Oxenham's book.

Mr. Douglas Sladen has two books coming out almost immediately—the one, hailing from Messrs. A. & C. Black, is only a reprint in sixpenny form of his successful novel, 'A Japanese Marriage,' of which over 20,000 copies have already been sold. The other is an entire novelty, which differs from his former publication, 'Who's Who,' in every particular except one, viz. that it deals with eminent people. 'Sladen's London and its Leaders,' though only a shilling book, has over a hundred and fifty illustrations, chiefly of the great ladies and leading beauties of the Court. All its information is given in the form of tables, one of which gives a list of the leading hostesses—in other words, the ladies most famous for their parties in London Society; another gives an alphabetical list of the nobility arranged by orders, with their London addresses; and other tables give the House of Commons, the leading Americans in London, the Royal Family, the Government, &c., all with their addresses. One of the most interesting tables of all is that which gives the leading people in London not comprised in the tables of nobility, Commons and hostesses—such as the leading authors, artists, journalists, soldiers, sailors, clergy, actors, musicians, and so on, also with their addresses. But the essence of the book is Society with a big S. It is the first book published in England which gives a list of those famous for social reasons.

Messrs. Longmans announce as in preparation a work on 'The Great Mountains and Forests of South America,' by Paul Fountain, author of 'The Great Deserts and Forests of North America'; also, 'Letters of Dorothea, Princess Lieven, during her Residence in London 1812-1834,' edited by Lionel G. Robinson, with two photogravure portraits.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall will publish immediately 'Cycle Rides round London, ridden, written, and illustrated,' as the title-page quaintly phrases it, by Mr. Charles G. Harper. The scope of the book covers rural districts from twenty to thirty miles round town, and on occasion even farther. Mr. Harper in his Preface points out how largely the bicycle has aided the holiday-maker, whose holidays extend only to half-days and week-ends, in knowing the fair country that surrounds the great city, and says that to have visited the 'pretty cot' at Chalfont St. Giles, where Milton lived; to have seen Jordans, where the early Quakers worshipped; to know Burnham Beeches; historic Hever Castle; and the stone at Kingston on which the Saxon kings were crowned, is to acquire a liberal education in one's native land. The book is illustrated with over a hundred and twenty sketches.

The King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Miss Sargent's 'Death of Oscar,' a poem on the Royal House of Tara, published by Mr. Norman Macleod, of Edinburgh.

The Junior Army and Navy Stores, Limited, have in the press, and will shortly publish, 'Latian Summers,' and 'An Excursion in Umbria,' by Ferdinand Gregorovius, translated by Dorothea Roberts. These sketches were written during his long residence in Italy when collecting the materials for his great 'History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages.' These note-books recording his first impressions of Italy have been translated into French, but never before into English, and may prove interesting to English and American visitors to Rome, especially those who visit the Eternal City for a long enough period to enable them to explore for themselves those beautiful encircling mountains which excited the enthusiastic admiration of Ferdinand Gregorovius.

Mr. John C. Nimmo published this week a new edition, revised and enlarged, in one volume, of 'A History of the Development of Opera, with full Descriptions of all Works in the Modern Repertory,' by R. A. Streatfeild, with an Introduction by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Also a new edition in one volume of the 'Memoirs of Count Grammont,' by Anthony Hamilton, edited by Sir Walter Scott. The chief feature the reader will find in this edition of the 'Memoirs of Count Grammont' is the series of twelve delicate and beautiful original compositions by C. Delort, etched by L. Boisson, illustrating for the first time subjects in the text of the historical work, which Macaulay, in his 'History of England,' refers to as being 'the most highly finished and vividly coloured picture of the English Court in the days when the English Court was gayest.'

Mr. John Macqueen will add two new books to his list of 'Sixpennies.' The first, which will be published this week, is 'Joan and Mrs. Carr,' by Rita, and the other 'The Baron's Sons,' by Dr. Maurus Jokai, which will follow next week. Mr. Macqueen announces for publication next week a 2s. edition of 'The Sign of the Cross,' of which he says 'over 300,000 copies have already been sold.'

A copy of Mr. Hartnoll's very interesting 'British Navy' souvenir of the Coronation has been graciously accepted by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The work gives illustrations and particulars of every type of vessel in our battle fleet.

Next week will appear the second issue of 'The Historic Families' series. The first great house dealt with was a Scotch one—the 'House of Douglas' (Sir Herbert Maxwell); this time we have one of the most splendid names in the English nobility. Both in the age of chivalry and in the Reformation period the Percys occupied a position of great, if not paramount, importance, and from the earliest period of authentic records there has been no grander title than that of King or Earl of Northumberland. The author (Gerald Brenan) of the present issue, the 'House of Percy,' treats the subject from the standpoint of the Roman Catholic with broad views. The romance of the family story has not been forgotten for the sake of more matter-of-fact historical details. The general editor of the series is Mr. W. A. Lindsay, K.C., M.A. (Windsor Herald), and Messrs. Freemantle & Co. are the publishers.

His Majesty the King has graciously accepted a copy of 'Crowned to Serve: a Coronation Welcome to our King and Queen,' by the Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., formerly Rector of St. Nicholas', Worcester. The new book is a companion volume to 'The Queen's Resolve,' which has reached a circulation of three hundred thousand copies. The King has also accepted a copy of 'Crown Jewels for Loyal Hearts and Homes,' for the Young, and School distribution, with 'Home Words Coronation Hymns.'

The Reliquary and Illustrated Archaeologist for July will contain illustrated articles on 'The Decorative Embroidery of the Seventh Century,' by Mrs. R. E. Head; 'The Forest of the Broyle and the Parks of Ringmer,' by W. Heneage Legge; 'Carib Stone Implements in the Horniman Museum,' by Richard Quick; 'Some Early Christian Monuments recently discovered at Kirk Maughold, Isle of Man,' by P. M. C. Kermode, &c.

In view of the extraordinary care which is being taken to render 'The Coronation Book of Edward VII.' worthy of the occasion, and on account of the number and special nature of the illustrations, it has been found impossible to publish the third part on the date announced—viz. the 18th. Messrs. Cassell & Company, state, however, that copies will be ready for issue to the trade on Friday next, the 20th inst.

Miss B. Sidney Woolf has written a new story for Little Folks which will commence in the July part. It is entitled 'The Girl at the Grey House.' In the same number a story for boys written by Mr. Harold Avery will be begun.

The Book Buyer for June (New York, Charles Scribner's Sons) is an exceptionally interesting number of this always interesting literary monthly. It contains some previously unpublished portraits of Frank R. Stockton, Leicester Ford, Coquelin, and a note on R. L. Stevenson, with some new pictures depicting his life in Samoa. There is also an appreciation of the work of Henry Reuberdahl as a marine artist by Mr. Fred T. Jane, with illustrations. It is pleasant to find Mr. Jane, who is himself a most vigorous and original marine illustrator, speaking so highly of the work of the Swedish artist.

Mr. W. M. Voynich tells us that he will have on view at his office, 1 Soho Square, from June 12 to July 20, 'about one hundred and fifty Unknown Books.' Unknown authors are much more common.

The authorities of the St. Louis Exposition have arranged that during the run of the World's Fair there will be held in St. Louis a Congress of Editors. The gathering will be international and cosmopolitan in its character. There is to be a club-house, fitted up with all the comforts of a big West-end club. Details as to definite arrangements will presently be issued by Mr. George F. Parker, the Resident British Representative of the St. Louis Exposition, Sanctuary House, Tothill Street, Westminster, S.W.

Miss Maud Cruttwell is preparing an important work to be entitled 'Luca and Andrea Della Robbia, and the Successors,' very fully illustrated, which Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish in the autumn. A feature of the book will be a list of all the existing works of Robbia, and to make this as complete as possible Miss Cruttwell would be very grateful for particulars of any such works as are in private possession in England, addressed to her, care of the publishers, Bedford Street, W.C.

Messrs. Charles Letts & Co., 3 Royal Exchange, send us an illustrated 32-page catalogue of their Diaries for next year, also a broadside order form, which booksellers and stationers will find useful when ordering the excellent publications of this firm.

Mr. Vincent O'Sullivan will shortly publish through Mr. Grant Richards a volume entitled 'A Dissertation upon Second Fiddles.'

NATIONAL BOOK TRADE PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

INAUGURAL MEETING AT MANCHESTER.

The above was held on Saturday, June 7, 1902, at the City Hotel, Long Millgate, Manchester, with the view of forming a benevolent society in connection with the provincial book trade. There was a large and representative attendance. Mr. Abel Heywood, Manchester, presided, and among those present were Messrs. C. Hills, 2 Winterhey Avenue, Seacombe; A. Chrystal, Market Street, Manchester; E. J. Rymer, Ilford; N. Akerman (Messrs. Chapman & Hall), 24 Stanley Road, Whalley Range; H. R. Brabrook, 17 Stanhope Street, Glasgow; W. A. Willshaw, St. Mary's Road, Monton; H. Carter (Blackie's), Moss Lane East, Manchester; A. Maw, 15 Plymouth Avenue, Manchester; F. Lawler, Anglesey Avenue, Harpurhey, Manchester; F. Johnson, 382 Dickinson Road, Longsight; H. E. Power, 16 Wellington Avenue, Whalley Range; J. Pates (S.P.C.K.), Church House, Liverpool; D. L. Smith (Scholastic Trading Co.); J. Johnston, 24 Fernhill Street, Liverpool; A. H. Baghurst, 5 Francis Street, Monton Green; J. R. Barlow, 38 Robert Street, Patricroft; F. R. Robinson, 6 Nell Lane, West Didsbury; B. H. Moulton, 67 Yarrowburgh Street, Moss Side; F. Mellor, Lark Hill Terrace, Oldham; A. Hornsby, 26 Mary Street, Harpurhey; and J. H. Wharnby, 54 Brislane Lane, Newton Heath, and many others.

In opening the proceedings the Chairman said: Gentlemen, I have been asked to take the chair at this preliminary meeting, I presume, because I am not only the oldest bookseller in Manchester, probably, but also am one of the oldest in the country—(hear, hear)—as I have been engaged in the trade for nearly half a century, and have had pretty nearly enough of it. (Laughter.) It is on account of this long period that I have been engaged in the business that I am asked to come here, and not from any experience I have had of societies such as you are about, as I hope, to form. But if I have no knowledge of societies of this kind, I must have a strong feeling in favour of them. Of course, with my long experience I have seen very many cases where societies such as you propose would have been a blessing to everybody concerned, and, therefore, the importance of a society such as you are about to form cannot be over-estimated. I was rather surprised, in one of the communications to one of the papers out of which this meeting has arisen, to see it stated by someone that they feared there would be a feeling among a good many of those who might be asked to subscribe, that they would feel some uncertainty as to whether they would ever receive any benefit from the society. That struck me as being the most extraordinary language I have ever heard in such a connection, because, if there is one thing in the world which a man would hope, it is that he would never be a beneficiary on a society such as this. (Hear, hear.) If that were his first wish, then his second wish must surely be that he might be able to help those who might be less fortunate than himself. It is for the purpose of helping the unfortunate, by seeking the help of the more fortunate to come to their assistance, that it is proposed that this society should be formed. Societies of this kind, I may say—although we have a gentleman in the room who is able to speak definitely upon the point—are, as we know, founded on very definite principles—upon what we may call mathematical principles and the doctrine of averages, as I suppose it may be termed. The doctrine of averages settles everything in connection with friendly societies in their management, and providing that you have a sufficiently large basis—that is, a sufficiently large number of subscribers—and that your business is managed in accordance with those mathematical principles, your success is bound to be assured. So that it is a tolerably simple affair, after all; and when we look round about this neighbourhood and see the large number of friendly societies that are in existence—societies of all manner of men—and see with what success they are managed by men whom I should expect to be of less intelligence than booksellers, then we may feel sure that that being so, the success of these numerous societies being so with their hundreds of thousands of members and millions of money in funds, I say when we see these things we may feel sure that we at least ought not to fail in this endeavour. (Applause.) We have got a very large number of men to appeal to; we have, I am sure, sufficient intelligence; and, therefore, there ought to be no doubt about it. But, as I say, we have the advantage of the presence of gentlemen who will be able to speak pretty much with certainty upon these points. There is only one other thing that I think has struck me in looking over this prospectus here, and that is as to what is meant by the term 'bookseller.' And it seemed to me that, unless you define what you mean by the term 'bookseller,' there may be some little difficulty at the outset. A bookseller in the country—whatever it may be in London—generally means something more than a bookseller. (Hear, hear.) I am something more than a bookseller myself, and I am very glad of it. (Hear, hear.) And the majority of the booksellers in the country, I say, have to be something more than booksellers, or they cannot make their living. Therefore, when you speak of 'bookseller' I think you ought to infer probably something of what may be called the necessary connections of bookselling. In the first place there is stationery, or fancy stationery, and in the next place there are the news agencies. Well, the newsagent proper is not one of the most intelligent of those engaged in our numerous trades. At least I think so, and it is very likely that the newsagent—that is, the man who is nothing more than the newsagent—is one from whom you could not expect to get much support. I think so: I may be quite wrong. But a bookseller who is also a newsagent is a very different person indeed. Of course, you may say there is the newsagent who is also a bookseller; but we will take the bookseller first, and, whether you have come to any opinion on that matter or not, it seems to me a very important question. I have not had the opportunity of talking matters over with Mr. Cater, or the other gentlemen who are at the head of this matter, but my feeling is that you ought to make the word 'bookseller' into a more comprehensive one (hear, hear). (A voice: 'book-trade.') Yes, I do not know whether that is sufficient even; but, however, that is merely by the way. There is nothing else in this matter that has struck me as being in any way uncertain. I feel there should be no uncertainty as to whether this project can be carried through or not. The only uncertainty there seems to be in my mind is, how are you going to make more comprehensive this word 'bookseller'? Well, I think that is all I need say at the outset. I am obliged to you for asking me to be here in the chair, because I think that it is a very necessary thing that this matter should be carried out, and anything that I can do either now or henceforth to help you I am sure I shall be very glad. (Hear, hear.) The first thing will be to ask Mr. Brabrook to propound his scheme and give the necessary explanations.

Mr. Brabrook: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in rising to address you I must confess I feel myself very much like a tablet of soap which is so much advertised just now, because you must not think, because my name has been so prominently brought forward in this movement, that I know much about provident societies. I took the matter up specially to see what could be done regarding a Book Trade Provident Society; and, as you see other trades have very successful societies, I asked myself the question, Why should not the book trade have one? Now for a long time past there have been letters in the trade papers suggesting that it would be a good thing to have a Provident Society for the United Kingdom for the book trade. These letters have appeared at regular intervals, and there the matter has stopped. Now I often thought it was a pity that no further step was taken in the matter, and I was always waiting for somebody to come forward and suggest a scheme, till at last I myself took the matter in hand and studied the question of such a society. I obtained the names of seven typical trade societies of known success, and the rules and balance-sheets I carefully compared, and from these seven societies I took what I considered the most popular points and embodied these points in a suggested prospectus for the proposed society. Well, this done, I sent my papers to the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, who very generously gave space for them in the issue of March 1. Since then a lot of correspondence has appeared on the question. Some of the letters are very useful, and others beside the point in question. Now, gentlemen, when I had done this I thought my work was finished. I did not expect to receive an ultimatum to come here to-day to speak about the matter, because I am no public speaker, and I assure you I would much rather sit down and listen to somebody else. There is, however, one thing about this society. It is not to be a one-man idea, it is not to be a concern run by one official; all who join have got to help in it. (Applause.) The success of this society will depend upon the actual co-operation of all the members. And as far as I am concerned I will do my best as a member to advance it, and each and everybody will have to do the same. Then, as regards this prospectus I have brought forward in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, I did not intend this prospectus of mine to be a final scheme. I merely put it forward as suggestions to be discussed. Many of the points in the prospectus will naturally, and of necessity, have to be altered. However, I will just read it as it appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR:—

'SUGGESTED PROSPECTUS OF THE PROPOSED NATIONAL BOOK TRADE BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—Members must have been in the trade three years; must be over 16 and under 50 years of age. Annual subscription, 5s., entitling to one vote; 10s., to two votes; life subscription of 10 guineas, two votes. Honorary membership: donation of 10 guineas qualifies a life governor, 50 guineas qualifies a life-president, and 100 guineas a vice-patron. Votes of honorary members at the rate of two votes for each £10. 10s. subscribed. Pensioners elected by ballot of members ['That is a question that will have to be raised later,' interpolated Mr. Brabrook], and not to exceed for men £25 and for women £20 per annum. Applicants for pensions must be over 50 years of age (widows 45 years), except in cases of affliction and disability to earn a living. Other sources of income must not exceed £30 per annum. Applicants must have been members for at least seven years. Temporary assistance and burial grants to be given at the discretion of the management. Funds, donations, legacies, &c., shall be added to the permanent fund, which shall not be reduced below the sum ascertained actuarially to be necessary to guarantee the annuities granted. Amounts received from annual subscriptions and dividends shall only be available for purposes of assistance until the permanent fund reach that sum. Then the government of the society. The society be under the control of a board of management consisting of thirty members, in addition to president, hon. treasurer, trustees, solicitor, hon. secretary, who shall be ex-officio members. The thirty un-official members of the board of management be elected from the subscribers; ten to retire in rotation annually and to be eligible for re-election. Members shall also elect the president, hon. treasurer, trustees, solicitor, and hon. secretary at the annual general meeting. The board of management shall have the usual power to make by-laws in conformity with the rules, and to authorise expenditure, &c.; also to appoint a secretary, treasurer, and collector under the usual conditions. The head office to be in London. The annual meeting to be held in one of the large towns of Great Britain, changing the place of meeting each year.

Mr. Akerman: Would you call this the Midlands?

Mr. Brabrook: Oh, yes; but I really don't know.

Mr. Akerman: Birmingham would be a good centre. Manchester seems to be in the north.

Mr. Brabrook: Many of the correspondents in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR state that such a society was not wanted, because there is already the London Booksellers' Provident Institution. Now this society is proposed not with any unfriendly spirit towards the London Provident Institution. That will continue its good work in spite of twenty societies such as we propose. Our society is not in any respect a rival to the London one; we simply desire to supplement their most useful work and action, and to fill up a place that they have left unoccupied. The work of the London Booksellers' Provident Institution is limited to a ten-mile radius from the General Post Office, London. It is not generally known to Londoners that a very small share of the bookselling of the country is done in that area. I should think that for one book sold in London seven or ten are sold out of it—that is, to the general public. I do not believe that the London book trade consists of one-tenth of the trading in this country, and it is to nine-tenths of the trade, therefore, that we appeal. Now our Society proposes a 5s. subscription, but of course we should expect a larger amount from those able to afford it. Then there is the question of what are the advantages to the trade in such a society. I will put some of them briefly: that for a small sum each year we are assured a small pension in case of distress or want in old age. That, for your brethren in the trade who 'founder on the rocks,' you have an organisation that will help him quietly and unostentatiously. Surely this is a better method than by public subscription in the trade papers. (Hear, hear.) That—and this applies to the younger men especially—the moral influence in belonging to a trade provident society is good for the individual and good for the trade. To my mind, what we need most in the book trade is a little more comradeship. Comparatively speaking, our trade is small and limited, and it is necessary that all branches of it should hold together and pull together. (Hear, hear.) Now a good provident society promotes what I am pleased to call 'comradeship' among its members, and for this reason alone I heartily desire to see our society established. We must not expect to commence with a large membership. A small beginning and a gradual growth will lead in time to the foundation of a good solid society. Say you commence in Manchester, Liverpool, and district, and use your best endeavours in getting all to join. When this is accomplished you could gradually extend your borders.

Local committees could be appointed throughout the country to further the interests of this society, and at the same time to promote social excursions or other social events for the members of the trade in their locality. By this means we should soon get to know one another better, and perhaps we should in this way be better able to remedy some of the most pressing evils which afflict our trade. What is 5s. a year to those who can afford it? Most of us can afford that. What is a pension of £25 a year? It is not much if we are wealthy and well, but we can also bear this in mind that £25 is worth having if we are old, unwealthy, and unwell. Is it worth our while spending this 5s. a year in the event of our wanting this £25? or is it worth while supporting the society for the sure and certain purpose of helping a brother who in days gone by worked side by side with us? My answer to both these questions is 'yes,' and I therefore urge upon the gentlemen present to inaugurate 'The National Book-Trade Provident Society.' Of course there are several points which need discussion, such as the means of granting relief, i.e. by ballot of members, or at the discretion of the management. Then should the society be 'benevolent,' i.e. with powers to grant relief to non-members or relatives of members. Or should it be run on the same lines as a friendly society, granting aid to the members only. These points could be left to the committee to decide. The records of existing trade societies are interesting, and the table showing the operation of eight of these, which appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of March 1, is worth studying. That appeared with my letter when it came out, and at the top in that list is the Newsagents' Benevolent Institution. I may say that that Institution has always been able to meet all its claims of relief. It has a 5s. subscription per year; the total income was £1,900, and the total funds are now £21,000. Last year they paid to pensioners £830, and the temporary relief was £127.

Mr. Akerman: Have they any special fund, or are they absolutely dependent upon subscriptions?

The Chairman: No, it has been supported very well by the large newspapers who have given donations to it.

Mr. Brabrook: But it is kept alive by the annual subscriptions of 5s.

The Chairman: It is also kept alive by the annual dinner, I think, is it not?

Mr. Brabrook: Yes, sir, pretty largely. (Laughter.) Then another benefit society is the National Union of Teachers, which we know well enough in the book trade, with an annual subscription of 5s. That has been established twenty-four years, and their members and subscribers number 22,000. Of course it is too large an example for us to take much information from. One objection that has been raised in the correspondence in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is that the members would be scattered, that they would be totally unknown, and would not have any influence on the society. But here are eight societies whose membership is separated all over the kingdom.

Take the Gardeners' Royal Benefit Society. There is no more scattered body than gardeners, and yet this is one of the most prosperous provident societies that exists.

The Chairman: But is not this a different society? Is not the term 'gardener' used in a sort of fanciful sense, like the 'Foresters' for instance?

Mr. Brabrook: Are you not thinking, sir, of the Free Gardeners'? It is the Free Gardeners' Society you are thinking of which is a friendly society, but this is the Gardeners' Royal Benefit Institution, and the membership is restricted to gardeners. But the peculiar point about that is that a man must have been in the trade thirty years before he can join the benefit society. It is now my pleasure and honour to propose the following resolution:

'That this meeting is of opinion that it is desirable that a Provident Fund should be inaugurated—open to all members of the book trade—both employers and employed, throughout the United Kingdom, that a provisional committee be formed to draw up a set of rules to meet the necessities of the case, and that the minimum subscription be 5s. per annum.'

Mr. H. M. Cater: I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution. Travelling about as I have done I have seen scores of cases where such an institution would have been a safety valve to many an assistant who has gone down instead of up. There are times in an assistant's life—I have experienced them myself—when through unforeseen sickness or trouble a little timely help would have been very useful. Now it is an old saying that 'God helps them that help themselves.' The first help a man can get must come from himself. If a man will not help himself he cannot expect his brothers to help him. Now I do not say that I can see eye to eye with my friend Mr. Brabrook or my friend Mr. Rymer as to the modus operandi of this proposed scheme. I should be heavily opposed to the voting principle. In any charity where a man subscribes to a benevolent fund, he subscribes as a rule, Mr. Chairman, I hope, not with any hope of benefiting himself, but with the hope that he himself will not want it, and that by that small subscription it may be there—even if he does not want it, and certain to be there for those who do. Now it is a very small subscription, and a man who subscribes should have some definite idea for what he is subscribing, so that when he comes—if he unfortunately should—to make a claim upon the Society he should know what he is going to receive and not be dependent upon the benevolence and mind of the board of management which may exist for the time being. Who is to know the applicant's need as the applicant himself? and when he comes to apply for relief it should be given upon a fixed scale for which he has paid his subscription. That is the point where I should differ from Mr. Brabrook—that it should not be a voting charity at all. One reason is that it often leads to a lot of touting for votes, which occasions an expenditure upon those who are least able to bear it. I have been elected—and so, no doubt, have several here—on voting charities, and we all know the annoyance—it is a real annoyance—of applications for the proxies, which entail not only trouble upon themselves, but expense upon those who are appealing for aid, and which they, of all people, can least afford to bear. That is my reason for being opposed to the voting principle. If that is established, let us have a given scale—a regularly constituted friendly society scheme—that the amount for relief shall be so much, the grants in the case of death so much, and so on, on a graduated scale. Whether the three years' limit is sufficient is a question which I am not ready to answer, but Mr. Brabrook thoroughly understands that. Of course there should be some limit before a man can be eligible, but that is all a matter of arrangement. But I should just like to emphasise my point that the constitution of the society should be established on the same principle as friendly societies, whereby relief is given for a given sum. With these few remarks I gladly second the resolution. The need of the society certainly exists, and I hope most heartily to see it carried through. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. F. J. Rymer: I rise to support this resolution of Mr. Brabrook's, and which has been so ably seconded by Mr. Cater. Mr. Cater splits on what I might call the voting rock in the scheme. I take it at the outset that this resolution says that a provisional committee be formed to draw up set rules to meet the necessities of the case, so that anything that is said in this meeting, either for or against voting by proxy for any benefit received, will be entirely settled by that committee, subject, of course, to a larger meeting for confirmation. Now, Mr. Cater spoke of that one point. I do not see myself how this society, when it is started, is going to get that measure of support from those who are in a position to support it, unless we give them a real and definite interest year by year, or half year by half year. Then in the distribution of the relief by means of proxies. I am a firm believer myself in representation where there is taxation, and looking upon this subscription in the light of a tax, I think, really, if I subscribe my 5s. a year I ought to have a vote for it, and that I ought to say who should, by that vote, receive a measure of relief where needed.

Then with regard to the subscription. It seems a very small subscription. But we have a very successful society—of which I hold a voting paper in my hand—in the London General Porters' Benevolent Association. I do not know what their gross funds are now, but I know they have a large number of pensioners, and although it has a large number of members and a large number of pensioners, there is something like twelve pensioners to be elected for the coming election on June 12, and there are only twenty applicants. So that if a society like that, after a great many years, only has twenty applicants, and are able to give twelve pensions, I think it points to the conclusion that a 5s. subscription is a safe basis on which to go in an institution like this. I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Akerman: I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been so well said, but I may say I am pleased indeed that this society is going to be formed. I wish it every success, and shall do everything to further its interests as long as I am connected with the book trade. I think the first and best thing we can do is to have the society properly formed, and then we can go into the matter and deal with the points referred to by Mr. Cater and Mr. Rymer afterwards. But let us settle the association first: let us agree to our subscription, and then when the committee has been formed I think we can put the matter into working order. I have every hope and feel confident that it will be a success, and I have great pleasure in supporting it.

The Chairman: If no other gentleman has anything to say I will put the resolution. You have already heard it, and it is unnecessary for me to read it again.

The resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. Cater: The next resolution will hardly come as a natural consequence of what has gone before.

Mr. Akerman: You must appoint a committee first to make rules.

Mr. Brabrook: I suggest that the committee be men from Manchester and the district.

The Chairman: It should include the neighbourhood, certainly.

Mr. Akerman: Certainly, Liverpool, Burnley, Stockport, &c., &c.

Mr. Cater: Then I beg to propose that a committee of ten be selected out of the trade in Manchester and district, and appointed to consider the details of the proposal.

The Chairman: The best way out of the difficulty would be to select ten on the committee with power to add to their number.

Mr. Cater: Then I propose that—that a committee of ten be appointed (with power to add to their number) to consider the provisions of the scheme.

Mr. Chrystal: I second it.

The resolution was adopted, and the following names were nominated by the meeting: Messrs. Abel Heywood, Akerman, Cater, Bates (Liverpool), Smith, Chrystal, Sherratt, Philip (Liverpool), Brady, W. H. Greenwood, F. Johnson, Lupton (Burnley), Brierly, and Hayling.

The Chairman: I ought to say I have received a letter from Mr. Sherratt, who regrets that he cannot be present at this meeting to-day.

Mr. Rymer proposed Mr. Joseph Thornton and Mr. Blackhorn, both of Oxford, as members of the committee, and it was agreed to.

Messrs. Cater and Brabrook were afterwards unanimously appointed joint secretaries to the Society.

The Chairman: We omitted a rider to the resolution appointing the committee that the names be selected from those who have been nominated. You will have no objection, I am sure, to the resolution being altered to include this. The next resolution is: 'That on as early a day as possible the said rules be submitted to a general representative meeting to be called in Manchester or Liverpool.'

Mr. Brabrook: I have got fifty names from members of the trade in Glasgow and district—members who are willing to join the society. (Hear, hear.) They have authorised me to vote by proxy in favour of the resolution to-day.

Mr. Akerman: I met two gentlemen to-day who promised to belong to the society.

Mr. Rymer: Several people have asked me already to take their names, but I told them nothing could be done until the society was started, and when the secretaries were appointed they could send their names with the particulars on to them.

The Chairman: It is fortunate that gentlemen who are at the head of this undertaking should be commercial travellers, because they can do a great deal in making this society known and also a success. They see the whole of the trade every year. I have some of them associated with me, and I should be very glad if they could induce their customers or their customers' servants to become members. And I am sure, if the commercial travellers would make it part of their business, it would insure success; I don't think it would interfere with their ordinary business.

Mr. Akerman: Everyone I know will take an interest in it.

Mr. F. Johnson (Messrs. John Heywood's): Speaking on behalf of John Heywood's I am sorry I could not get here earlier. I have had several conversations with our trustees about it, and they are entirely sympathetic. It was also mentioned to me that Mr. John Heywood tried to start a small provident society in connection with our place, and volunteered some money to start it, but our people were lukewarm in its reception, and it did not go through. This time, however, a good many of our assistants seem to give the society much encouragement. None of them could have been here to-day, but Saturday is a very awkward day. Many of them have expressed their willingness to become members, although several are already members of the Manchester Warehousemen and Clerks, and one or two other local branches. Still, many of them have told me that if this society of ours were going to be a national affair, they would be honoured if they were allowed to join it.

Mr. Brabrook: I propose that the title of the society be the 'National Book-Trade Provident Society.' It would be a pity to clash with any other society.

Mr. Rymer: I second that.

The resolution was adopted.

The Chairman: Now we want a proposer to the other resolution.

Mr. Wharby: May I suggest that it would be a good thing to hold the next meeting in Liverpool, so as to infuse some interest in the society there? The trade in Manchester knows about it fairly well already.

Mr. Johnson: If it is going to be a national affair, what about Birmingham?

Mr. Rymer: All these things will be decided in the rules.

Mr. Brabrook: The meetings, as a matter of fact, will take place in different towns each year.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Cater: We should now be glad to hear suggestions from any member present.

Mr. Akerman: Well, I hope we shall be able to get some big subscriptions from some of the wealthy members of our trade, so that we can have a nucleus to work on.

Mr. Brabrook: Before we look to that we had better appoint our officers, and have the society in working order.

The Chairman: Of course you will have to get your scheme first, but I have no doubt that those whom you allude to will be ready to help you in the matter: I am sure of that.

Mr. Akerman: You know, sir, what it is to have a good reserve.

Mr. Rymer: I feel sure that many of the large publishers will liberally support it.

Mr. Cater: There is one duty we have yet to perform, and I hardly can express the pleasure I feel in proposing it. It is that we offer our best thanks to the worthy Chairman, who has seconded our efforts in this respect by presiding to-day.

Mr. Akerman: I second it, with the hope that Mr. Abel Heywood will assist for many years yet to come in building up an institution which not only booksellers but the whole world will be proud of.

Mr. Rymer: Before that is put will you allow me to support it? When I went to Mr. Heywood and asked him to take the chair, the way he received me showed that he had the cause of the charity very near his heart, and I feel sure he was led to take the matter up, because he felt there was great work to be done. I thank him personally for coming here this afternoon, and I am sure you will do the same most heartily. (Hear, hear.)

The Chairman: I am obliged to you very much. I certainly was greatly interested in the matter, and I feel very much its necessity, and it is on that account I have come. I had intended to say more than I did in my opening speech, but the fact of the matter was I had left the notes I had prepared on my desk at the office, and, as is usually the case when I get on my legs, many of the fine things I had intended to say slipped from my memory. (Laughter.) I am very much obliged to you for the kind expressions that you have given me.

At an informal after-meeting of those elected on the provisional committee it was decided to commence at once by adapting the model draft of rules issued by the Government to the needs of the new Society. The hope was expressed that the work of the provisional committee would be completed, and a meeting of the trade called to consider the same within a month or six weeks.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S WAY.

The Queen's interest in and oversight of public affairs did not cease with the Prince's death, although, in the first years of overwhelming sorrow, it must have been difficult to carry out her conception of duty. All important resolutions were taken by her; the personal notes in the Court Circular were written by her own hand, and were seen by no one else. When Sir Henry Ponsonby became the Queen's private secretary, she said to him: 'Remember this: no advice! I am older than you are, and have had more experience.' In after years historians will have much to say upon the Queen's personal share in the government of her dominions. All her papers have been most carefully preserved and arranged, and some day, perhaps, will be accessible to the inquirer. On the other hand, there is not a single paper belonging to George III. which is known to be in existence.—Prof. Oscar Browning in the June 'Century.'

THE LATE MR. GEORGE PHILIP.

was privately educated, and after being in business with his father for several years was admitted a partner in 1848. From that date he devoted himself with characteristic energy to the development of the business, and as a result of his hard work and business aptitude, in which he was ably seconded by his cousin, Mr. T. D. Philip, what was originally a retail bookselling, stationery, and publishing business rapidly assumed very much larger proportions, until at the present time the three principal branches of the original concern are each represented by a separate business. These three businesses are Messrs. Philip, Son, & Nephew, Educational and General Booksellers, of South Castle Street, Liverpool; Messrs. Philip & Co., Limited, Wholesale and Manufacturing Stationers, of Caxton Buildings, South John Street, Liverpool; and Messrs. George Philip & Son, Limited, Educational and Geographical Publishers, of 32 Fleet Street, London, and Victoria Road, Willesden Junction.

In each of these businesses Mr. Philip took an active interest up to the time of his death, devoting himself more particularly to the affairs of Messrs. Philip & Co. and Messrs. George Philip & Son. The latter was his special care, and he took the keenest interest in everything connected with the preparation and production of maps, particularly in those intended for educational requirements.

Shortly before his death, and at an age when most men would shrink from further exertion, Mr. Philip decided, in the interests of the business, to transfer the map-printing works from Liverpool to London. With this object a freehold site was secured at Willesden Junction, on which a factory was erected and equipped with electrically-driven printing machinery of the most modern type. The transfer of the works to London and the formation of the business into a limited company were only accomplished a few weeks before his death.

Mr. Philip devoted so much of his time to business that he never took any prominent part in political or municipal affairs, but he had a very extensive acquaintance, and his many acts of benevolence and usefulness will endear his memory to all those with whom he came in contact.

More Coronation Literature.

THE CROWNING OF THE KING: a souvenir, pictured by J. Twist. London: John Long, 6 Chandos Street, W.C.

This coloured picture book differs somewhat from the ordinary run of works especially prepared for the Coronation, in that it presents the humorous as well as the imposing aspects of the occasion. We can hardly say that the portraits of royalty are particularly lifelike; but any shortcomings in this direction are amply atoned for by the brilliancy of the colouring. The doggerel accompanying the illustrations is after the usual type of books of this description, and its character may be gathered from the following lines:—

'Then Hail to the King and Hail to the Queen,

A much-beloved couple they ever have been.'

CORONATION OF A KING, OR THE CEREMONIES, PAGEANTS, AND CHRONICLES OF CORONATIONS OF ALL AGES, by M. F. Johnston. With illustrations reproduced from old prints &c. London: Chapman & Hall, Limited, 1902.

Much interesting information is given in this well-written volume concerning the formalities observed at Coronation ceremonies, both in recent times and at an earlier period. No doubt the occasion has to a large extent been deprived of its ancient glories, and the attendant festivities are no longer what they once were. The banquet in Westminster Hall alone was a scene of the greatest magnificence, and was witnessed by many thousands of spectators. In connection with this feast many feudal services were formerly rendered, which of course, with the discontinuance of the custom, have themselves disappeared. The office of Grand Carver, for instance, was performed by the Earls of Lincoln; that of Chief Lardner was in the family of the Nevils, Lords Abergavenny. The perquisites attached to these offices were frequently of a curious description. The Chief Lardner received all the beef, mutton, venison, kids, lard and other flesh, as also the fish and salt, remaining after the banquet, and to the Chief Butler fell 'the best gold cup and cover, with all the vessels and wine remaining under the bar, and all the pots and cups, except those of gold or silver, which shall be in the wine cellar after dinner.' As a rule, each subject was wont to be presented with the articles concerned in his own special office. Thus the Lord Great Chamberlain received as his perquisite the basins and towels used at the royal toilette (at which he assisted), the bedding and the furniture of the room in which the King had slept on the previous night, the King's wearing apparel and his night-gown, and about forty yards of crimson velvet. All this and much more the author tells us in the opening chapter of his volume on 'The Crowning of a King,' and he then proceeds, after some few remarks on early Coronations generally, to treat of 'Coronations in the Confessor's Abbey,' 'Coronations from 1272-1558,' and 'Coronations from 1604-1838.' Remaining chapters are devoted to the Regalia, the Knights of the Bath, some memorable Coronations (including reference to the Coronation of the Popes of Rome) and Coronations in the Far East. Throughout, the book is most readable, the simple, unaffected style of the author, and the admirable way in which he has arranged his material, adding greatly to its charm. The illustrations also are of considerable interest.

THE SERVICE FOR THE CORONATION OF THEIR MAJESTIES KING EDWARD VII. AND QUEEN ALEXANDRA, June 26, 1902. London: C. J. Clay & Sons, Cambridge University Press.

This is printed in great primer type, and is super royal 8vo. in size. The directions for the ceremonies that are to be observed stand out in red lettering. The entire production is exceedingly handsome, and the size of the type renders it especially easy to read. This edition is uniform with the Cambridge Standard edition of the Prayer Book, and it may be purchased either in a paper binding or in leather (royal red or royal blue). No edition we have come across seems more appropriate to the occasion.

A CORONATION POEM, by George Barlow. London: Henry J. Glaisher, 57 Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square. 1902.

Inspired by the solemnity of the occasion the author gives utterance to the loyal and kindly thoughts that forcefully rise in his mind. He commences with a direct appeal to his Sovereign—

'King, to-day thou takest over from the hands of Time the viewless lord

More than man can dream of greatness, realms no monarch won by plot or sword,' and after alluding to the extent of the Empire, the joyousness that is to-day animating all her people, and the opportunities for good possessed by the King, concludes—

'Chance of winning, when the moment comes for laying both sword and sceptre down, Even a higher than of England, even God's loyal servant's deathless crown.'

The poem displays a happy delicacy of conception, and at times much eloquent expression.

WE WELCOME THEE, O KING! a Hymn and Tune suitable for use at Services in Celebration of the Coronation of his Majesty King Edward VII. and her Majesty Queen Alexandra. Music and words by the Rev. J. Mountain. Music revised by W. W. Starmer, Esq., A.R.A.M. London: Morgan & Scott.

The character of this little work is sufficiently indicated by the title. Both words and music seem appropriate to the object for which they have been composed, and no doubt the publication will be largely made use of during the coming services in town and country.

THE BIBLE FOR THE CORONATION SERVICE will be an Oxford large quarto book, the joint gift of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. This Bible is now being bound at the Oxford University Binding House in London, red polished levant morocco leather being employed for the purpose. On both covers will be a Tudor rose border; on the front a cottage roof centre design enclosing the royal arms; on the back the arms of Edward the Confessor, Oxford University, Cambridge University, and Westminster Abbey. The doublure is of Russia leather with a plain border, the rose, thistle, and shamrock being introduced as ornaments. There will be no clasp or metal corners, but the edges will be solid gilt. Queen Victoria's Coronation Bible, which was also printed at the Oxford University Press, was bound in crimson velvet with silver gilt clasp and corners, the doublure being blue watered silk.

A LITERARY CORONATION CURIOSITY. THE GREATEST AND SMALLEST BOOK IN THE WORLD.

Messrs. David Bryce & Son, of Glasgow, send us a Coronation Miniature Bible, illustrated. This little book which would go into a hen's egg, contains 896 pages, 773,746 words, and 3,566,482 letters, also 18 line illustrations. The price is only 6d., with portraits of the King and Queen in a gilt cross or shield on the side. It is a marvellous piece of mechanical production, as most of it is legible with a magnifying glass.

Letters to the Editor

OUR LONDON HOSPITALS.

DEAR SIR,—Hospital Sunday is this year fixed for of June 15, and I venture to hope that the advanced copy of the Hospital Sunday Supplement of the Hospital which I enclose will prove interesting and useful to you editorially.

In the Coronation year I trust I may rely upon you, as one of the chief metropolitan editors, to co-operate in the earnest attempt which is being made this year to induce all classes of Londoners to contribute liberally to our hospitals through the Hospital Sunday Fund.

I hope that you may be willing to devote a little space in each issue from and including Monday 9th to Saturday 14th inst. in furtherance of this effort, for which purpose the enclosed Supplement contains much original matter and some new ideas and fresh points. As a resident in the Metropolis of the Empire, too, I am confident you will do your utmost very cheerfully to help to make this necessary work for all classes a complete success this year.

Yours faithfully,

HENRY C. BURDETT,

Editor of the Hospital.

'THE HOSPITAL,'

28 & 29 Southamton Street,

Strand, London, W.C.:

June 6, 1902.

[Very glad to extend the hospitality of our columns to this appeal from the Hospital, which is doing such excellent work in bringing home the claims of our hospitals on our support.—Ed. P.C.]

NEARLY TWO MILLION SUFFERERS HELPED BY THE HOSPITALS.

A SINGLE YEAR'S ROLL-CALL OF THE SICK.

How many patients are annually treated in the London hospitals? The cases which we have sorted out under the various headings comprise those treated at the voluntary hospitals and dispensaries of London—together with the endowed hospitals of St. Bartholomew's, Guy's, and St. Thomas's—and the hospitals of the Metropolitan Asylums Board. Altogether they reach the immense total of one million nine hundred and sixteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine patients; and dividing these into men, women, and children, we arrive at the following result: that of the 1,916,769 patients, 740,783 were men, 644,033 were women, and 531,953 were children.—Special 'Hospital' Sunday Supplement.

BEGGARS OF BOOKS.

The system of begging for books—for it has become quite a system—seems to be extending to the colonies. A publisher writes with reference to our remarks on the subject last week, and says:

'Don't you think this application is pretty cool? I really think that the Department of Agriculture of Melbourne, Victoria, ought to be ashamed of begging from publishers in London. The following is a copy of the application referred to.'

'Department of Agriculture,

'Melbourne: May 5, 1902.

'DEAR SIRS,—It has been decided to form a Technical Library in connection with our Agricultural Department for the use of the various experts engaged in the different branches, and I venture to ask you to send specimens of the valuable technical works published by you.

'A Royal Commission on Technical Education for Victoria has recently issued its report and it would supply a felt want to have the best modern scientific literature available here for consultation and reference.

'Thanking you in anticipation,

I remain, Dear Sirs,

'Yours faithfully,

'D. McALPINE.'

We notice that this application is printed on paper made at 'The Original Turkey Mill Kent,' and we wonder if the Department of Agriculture of Victoria has written to the mill for gratis supplies of paper for the 'use of the various experts in the different branches.' If not, why not? The production of 'valuable technical works' is infinitely more costly than the production of blank paper.

TRANSLATION OF CLARK RUSSELL'S NOVELS.

SIR,—It might interest A. C. K. to know I saw a chapter of one of C. R.'s novels (evidently a serial) in a paper I took up in a café at Rome last week, but I did not make a note of paper or tale. I fancy it was 'Frozen Pirate.'

Yours truly, S. WELLS.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.—

'A Dictionary of the Bible, dealing with its Language, Literature, and Contents, including the Biblical Theology,' edited by James Hastings, M.A., D.D. Vol. IV.: Pleroma—Zuzim. With this instalment the publication of a notable and exceedingly useful work is brought to a conclusion, though an extra volume, we understand, is in preparation, to contain indices and certain subsidiary articles of importance. The editor and the able body of contributors who have assisted him may be warmly congratulated on the result of their labours. The articles with but few exceptions are distinguished by profound knowledge and concise and scholarly treatment. Nor has one necessary department in which encyclopædias and dictionaries of this description so frequently err been neglected—the apportionment of space to each subject has manifestly been the subject of careful consideration. There are, so far as we have observed, no long articles devoted to questions of secondary moment, while topics of far greater importance are dismissed in comparatively little space. The excellent supervision and discretion shown by the editor, in short, is one of the most commendable features of the book, and can scarcely fail to add to its value as a work of reference and Biblical guide. Within the limited space at our command it is impossible to refer to all the many admirable articles in the present volume, but the following have especially struck our attention: 'Hebrew Poetry,' by Professor K. Budde; 'Prayer,' by the Rev. E. R. Bernard M.A.; 'Predestination,' by the Rev. B. B. Warfield, D.D.; 'Priests and Levites,' by Professor Von Baudissin; 'Prophecy and Prophets,' by the late Professor A. B. Davidson; 'Propitiation,' by Professor S. R. Driver; 'Book of Psalms,' by Professor W. T. Davidson; 'Regeneration,' by Professor J. V. Bartlett; 'Resurrection,' by the Rev. E. R. Bernard, M.A.; 'Book of Revelation,' by Professor F. C. Porter; 'Righteousness in the New Testament,' by Professor G. B. Stevens; 'Epistle to the Romans,' by the Rev. A. Archibald Robertson, M.A., D.D.; 'Sacrifice,' by Professor William P. Patterson; 'Septuagint,' by Professor Eberhard Nestle; 'Tabernacle,' by Professor A. R. S. Kennedy; 'Temple,' by Professor T. Wilton Davies; 'Vulgate,' by the Rev. H. J. White, M.A.; and 'Writing,' by Frederic G. Kenyon, M.A.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Saint Antony of Padua (1195–1231),' by M. l'Abbé Albert Lepitre, translated by Edith Guest. The analytical method which M. Lepitre follows in this life of the saint, though it might be supposed to give a vacillating tone to his discourse, is in reality its chief attraction. As he carefully weighs the evidence in favour of the recorded events in St. Antony's life, as often as not rejecting the testimony as untrustworthy or insufficient, the reader is certain to be attracted by the critical judgment displayed, and to be interested, we had almost said, in spite of himself. The subject of the biography was originally named Fernando, and was a native of Lisbon. It was not until he joined the Franciscan Friars, after a period spent in the monastery of St. Cross, at Coimbra, that he took the name of Antony. Little that is trustworthy is known of his ancestors. In after years he led a life of earnest devotion, and is said to have performed many miracles—indeed it was on account of these that the Sovereign Pontiff, we are told, did not even wait one year before canonising him. But of those worked during his lifetime, as M. Lepitre points out, the evidence is scarcely adequate. It is an interesting little work, well worthy of the neat, scholarly series in which it appears.

From Messrs. R. Grant & Son, Princes Street, Edinburgh.—'The County Directory of Scotland for 1901–1904,' postally edited by George Massie, General Post Office, Edinburgh, and compiled by Arthur Giles, F.R.S.G.S., proprietor and general editor. It is the fate of works of this description that with each successive edition the bulk increases, and large though the previous eleven issues were this certainly seems to us the largest. The general public, however, have no cause to complain on this account, for the advantage is decidedly theirs. Into the present volume a huge amount of information respecting the postal addresses of mansions and other rural residences in Scotland, their occupants, the nearest telegraph offices and distance, the postal and telegraph addresses of all towns, villages, inhabited islands, &c., the figures of the census taken in 1901 of counties, burghs, and civil parishes, with other matters, has been compressed, and its character and the method of its arrangement shows how thoroughly the editors have entered into their work. In the introductory pages some interesting facts are tabulated in regard to 'The Progressive Past,' being 'dates and data' furnished by men of letters and newspapers. These are arranged under the respective headings of 'The Royal Mail,' 'Postal,' 'Telegraphs,' 'The Telephone,' and 'Wireless Telegraphy.' There are also portraits of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B., J. Henniker Heaton, M.P., George Stephenson, Thomas A. Edison, Guglielmo Marconi, James Chalmers, the Hon. Wm. Mulock, LL.D., and James B. Lindsay. An excellent map of Scotland in a separate case, which has been reduced from the ordnance survey and specially prepared by Messrs. J. Bartholemew & Co., gives further distinction to a work which seems to have been very carefully revised and brought up to date.

From Messrs. William Green & Sons, Edinburgh.—'Public Health and Preventive Medicine,' by C. J. Lewis, M.D., D.Sc., and Andrew Balfour, M.D., B.Sc. The main object of this weighty volume is to provide a suitable and reliable work for 'those studying with a view to obtain registrable qualifications in Public Health,' but it is also hoped that it will prove of value to those already qualified, the members of sanitary committees, and others interested in sanitary problems. The book is divided into five main sections, respectively devoted to a consideration of 'Medicine,' 'General Sanitation,' 'Sanitary Engineering and Building Construction,' 'Vital Statistics,' and 'Sanitary Administration and Sanitary Law.' Under the heading of the first section come communicable, parasitic, occupational, and alimentary diseases; the subject of General Sanitation is sub-divided into questions of meteorology, climate, air, soil, water, food, sewage, clothing, exercise, and other considerations especially affecting the individual; while the section on Sanitary Engineering and Building Construction is principally concerned with the erection of healthy houses, questions of ventilation, heating, lighting, water supply, disposal of sewage, and so forth. The chapters on Vital Statistics and Sanitary Administration and Sanitary Law sufficiently explain themselves in their titles. From this brief survey of the contents it will readily be seen how thoroughly comprehensive Messrs. Lewis and Balfour's book is. It remains but to speak of the facts, which in all cases appear to be perfectly trustworthy, and are expounded with a clearness and brevity that add immensely to the value of the manual. Six coloured plates, executed by Mr. Robert Muir, of the Pathological Department of the University of Edinburgh, are included in the medical portion of the volume, and there are also numerous other illustrations, the work principally of Mr. G. K. Green.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'Moose-Hunting, Salmon-Fishing, and other Sketches of Sport: being the Record of Personal Experiences of Hunting Wild Game in Canada,' by T. R. Pattillo. Nova Scotia, where so much of the author's time was spent, would seem to be a perfect Paradise for sportsmen, and though it is scarcely possible that game is so plentiful there as when Mr. Pattillo first explored the territory some thirty and odd years ago there is still doubtless enough and to spare for the expert hand. Mr. Pattillo enters with such keen appreciation into the account of his experiences that there are few readers of the sporting persuasion, we fancy, who will not be inspired to emulate his deeds. Simply and unaffectedly though his narrative is told, we seem almost to be excited spectators of the various scenes, and follow with breathless interest the tracking of the moose, the protracted play of the salmon, and the artful circumvention of the wild geese. Sometimes we may a little suspect the author of drawing the long bow, but this of course is mere jealousy—the despicable thought of a wretched scribe who has never enjoyed such exhilarating sport himself and as far as present circumstances point never will. We are magnanimous enough, however, to recommend this book to all who are fond of fishing and shooting. It is perhaps not altogether orthodox in some of its sentiments, but this will in no way detract from the pleasure of reading it. To give variety to the contents, the author has added a glowing description of certain exciting experiences that happened to him during a voyage from Liverpool

Novia Scotia, to Trinidad, and Mr. R. B. Marston, editor of the Fishing Gazette, has supplied a short appreciative Introduction.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—Mr. Maarten Maartens is one of the few modern novelists who have never succumbed to the temptation to write pot-boilers; all his work is very carefully and delicately done, and we welcome heartily this re-issue of his works at the popular price of three-and-sixpence. 'God's Fool,' 'The Greater Glory,' and 'An Old Maid's Love' are just lately to hand. We can do no more than recommend them to all who love the work of this clever Dutch novelist, who writes in our own tongue as familiarly and as fluently as he does in his own.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Shadowy Third,' by Horace Annesley Vachell. This is a novel of considerable cleverness and no little originality. As a study in jealousy it is quite convincing. Ursula Severne marries Ralph Beaufoy, who has previously divorced his wife on account of her desertion; they have a child, and because her husband lavishes so much affection upon it Ursula becomes consumed by jealousy. The child dies, and Ursula, secretly glad, takes her former place with Ralph as his 'pal' and wife. Complications ensue when on a visit to Paris they come into contact with Beaufoy's first wife: she is now an actress with a scandalous record. At this stage a beautiful girl is introduced: she is Beaufoy's daughter by his first wife. She has been brought up in a convent in entire ignorance of her mother's real life and character, and with the conviction that her father has behaved badly to her mother. She is induced to enter the family circle, and Ursula is again made miserable by the jealousy which she cannot kill. The final scenes of the novel are striking and well written. Altogether, the book is a notable one, for it is not often that the jaded reviewer comes across a tale that combines the qualities of freshness, insight into character, and writing that is at once forcible and illuminating.

From Mr. Alexander Ross.—'In the Highlands,' by G. R. T. Ross. If Mr. Ross's muse never scales adventurous heights, it is nevertheless able to maintain a level that is by no means despicable. The verses are accomplished, neat, and sincere; they evince a love of Nature that is praiseworthy, and though by no means of great value, are pleasing enough effusions of an undoubted, though narrow, talent.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'A Man, a Woman, and a Million,' by Adolphe Danziger. It is hard to say which of these three features in this novel is the most important. For the man is such a man—so energetic, so determined, so fertile in resource; the woman so dazzlingly beautiful and exceptionally gifted; and the million so productive of important results. All the characters live in Warsaw, where the man keeps a bazaar, the woman is the daughter of an aristocrat, and the million is made in the course of business. Briefly, the plot of the story rests on the fact that the merchant, Curt Graffon, rescues Helen Polski from a fire and then suddenly disappears, only leaving behind the recollection of a tall, black, and begrimed man who for a couple of minutes had held her in his arms and had risked his life to save her. Short as the experience was, however, it had been sufficient to make an indelible impression on her heart. Curt Graffon, too, had fallen in love with her, and it was with the object of winning her that he had so manfully striven to make the million of money. Circumstances favoured him in that the Polskis fell into comparative poverty, and he was able to be of use to the father, a man of extravagant habits. But Helen would not look at him—she, a young lady of noble lineage, was scarcely likely to regard at all favourably a mere merchant, though secretly she quite recognised his good looks and manly bearing, and of course she was not aware that he was her hero of the fire. How matters eventually right themselves we must leave to the reader the pleasure of finding out. The story, if a little heavy in places, is full of adroit character study, and the incidents are lively and animated.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Limited.—'The Adventures of Augustus Short: Things which I have done for Others and wish I hadn't,' by Richard Marsh. Those who imagine from their experience of Mr. Marsh's previous works that they will be brought into touch with the horrible or supernatural in these stories will find themselves mistaken. The adventures of Augustus Short are all of a comical description, and tend to exhibit him in a series of very undignified but highly amusing situations. He takes rooms, for instance, at the seaside on behalf of some friends of his sister, and is eventually obliged to settle with an indignant landlady himself; he buys a pair of patent leather shoes from a chum, for whom they are too small, and has the most humiliating experiences in consequence; he next appears as the driver of a motor car without having the remotest idea of its internal economy, and meets with a variety of accidents; and, as an old bachelor, he has two school boys of a peculiarly unruly, mischievous disposition, and two young girls, thrown on his hands by an eccentric father. He also passes through many other unenviable experiences. Throughout there is rather an air of forced jollity, as though the author were desperately striving to be funny under adverse circumstances; but the ordinary reader of youthful years will no doubt perceive nothing of this, and may be trusted to be very heartily amused by poor Mr. Short's mishaps.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

AMERICAN PRESS AND THE R. D. BLACKMORE MEMORIAL.

Lovers of the best in literature, in America no less than in England, says the Providence Journal, are indebted sufficiently to Richard Doddridge Blackmore to make the projected memorial to him in Exeter Cathedral of interest to them. The memorial is to take the form of a marble tablet with a medallion portrait or bust. The place chosen is in the midst of Blackmore's own county of Devon—the land of which he wrote so affectionately and which his books have helped to endear to thousands who have never seen it. Some of his own contemporaries in letters are on the committee who have the matter in charge — Mr. Eden Phillpotts, Mr. Thomas Hardy, and Mr. Clark Russell among them. The author of 'Lorna Doone' will live longest, no doubt, in the hearts of his readers; yet the visible tribute is none the less welcome. He was a son of Devon in every sense of the word, and his family had been for years identified with what was best in its history. Never seeking notoriety, after the fashion of the popular novelist of the day, content to do his work and let the reward take care of itself, he would probably himself, were it still of any concern to him, best like such a reminder of his name and fame as is now proposed. That America should have some share in it is eminently fit and proper. To say that we have men of letters of our own would be an ungracious response. In the domain of literature America and England are still one; nor are English memorials to American writers unknown.

Blackmore's art needs no praise at this late day. Yet perhaps he has not been altogether appreciated even by some of those who recognise the keenness of his insight and the fineness of his touch. 'Lorna Doone' will doubtless remain his most popular novel; but he was by no means a man of one book, and it is well that this fact should be emphasised. 'Cripps the Carrier' is a novel which alone would suffice to confer a reputation; and there are those who prefer 'The Maid of Sker' to anything else he ever wrote. Without making a catalogue of his books it may be said that in all of them the essential qualities of his mind are obvious, though in greater or less degree; he could not always command—who can?—the same measure of inspiration. In depicting natural scenery he had few rivals. Perhaps no single passage of his is quite equal to Mr. Hardy's description of Egdon Heath; but taken in the mass no one has surpassed Blackmore in conveying by the imperfect means of the printed page an impression of natural beauty. No doubt at times he let his pen run away with him and repelled the reader whose taste was less exquisite in these matters than his own. That, however, is only saying that he had the defects of his virtues. He has left a worthy disciple in Mr. Phillpotts, but even so his genius, like that of other great artists, remains incommunicable. His drawing of character is massive in strength, but none the less delicate. His peasants savour of the soil and his gentlefolk have real distinction.

In these days of low aims, when to sell a hundred thousand copies seems to be the chief ambition of the compounder of fiction, it is salutary to recall the career and accomplishment of a man like Richard Doddridge Blackmore. He made no extravagant assertions; he never posed in the public view; he did his work in his own way and left it to speak for itself. Even his most popular novel, 'Lorna Doone,' was ushered in with no flourish of trumpets. It seemed at first to fall from the press a still-born immortal, as Mr. Swinburne finely said of Collins's odes. No one was more surprised by its after-fate than the author himself, who wrote that the highest tribute paid to it was that of the Devonshire man who said it was 'as good as clotted cream—almost.' But 'Lorna Doone' and the rest of the novels are better than clotted cream or any other material product of Devon. The tablet in Exeter Cathedral will remind generations to come of the man whose life and work were both worthy of any honour that can be offered to him.

Other important American papers, including the New York Nation, have also noticed the memorial, and we hope that Mr. Albert H. Whitin will be able to send us a good many subscriptions. As we have already stated, he has asked us to keep the Fund open at present, and we hope, as a writer in the Boston Journal says, 'as small contributions to the fund will be as welcome as large, everyone who has hung enchanted over the wonderful pages of Blackmore's "Lorna Doone" will require no second appeal to bestow his gratitude and generosity.'

THE ROBERT BUCHANAN MEMORIAL FUND.

We are asked to state that the subscription list of the proposed memorial to the late Mr. Robert Buchanan will shortly be closed. The movement has, we learn, received the support of many distinguished men and women connected with the literary and dramatic professions; and a committee will shortly be appointed to consider what form the memorial shall take. In the meantime the honorary secretaries will be grateful if intending subscribers, who have not yet contributed, will be so good as to communicate with the Rev. Thomas Varney, St. Mark's Hostel, Southend-on-Sea, or with Mr. Coulson Kernahan, the Savage Club, Adelphi Terrace, London.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales have been pleased to accept from Mr. Henry Frowde, Oxford University Press, copies of 'The Coronation Prayer Book,' dedicated by special permission to the King. The Prince and Princess of Wales have also accepted copies of the limited edition of the Coronation Service printed at the Oxford Press on handmade paper.

President Roosevelt is the foremost and principal contributor to a finely illustrated volume in the 'American Sportsmen's Library' (published in this country by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.) which treats of 'The Deer Family' in America. His experiences of hunting the Muledeer, the Whitetail, the Pronghorn, and the Wapiti are recorded with enthusiasm, and cover the chase with dogs as well as with rifle. But it will specially interest readers to find in President Roosevelt a keen naturalist, and a sportsman who has the true sportsman's dislike for the wanton destruction of game, shooting for record bags, or the killing of breeding animals. Another section on the Deer and Elk of the Pacific Coast is contributed by Mr. T. S. Van Dyke; Mr. D. G. Elliot writes a chapter on the Caribou, and Mr. A. J. Stone one on the habits and haunts of the Moose.

'The Life of Queen Alexandra,' written by Mrs. Sarah A. Tooley and published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, is being done into Braille type under the auspices of the British and Foreign Blind Association. Some friends of the blind had expressed a wish that these afflicted ones should have the opportunity of reading this interesting biography of our well-beloved Queen. The work is being pushed forward, and the translator hopes to complete the work shortly.

Nos. 1 and 2 of Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode's édition de luxe of the 'Official Form of Coronation Service' have been graciously accepted by their Majesties the King and Queen, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales have expressed their willingness to receive copies numbered 3 and 4.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's 'Welsh Library,' of which Prof. Owen M. Edwards—author of 'Wales' in the 'Nations' series—is the editor, will contain both new and standard works connected with Wales, Welsh history, and Welsh literature, and its volumes will be published in paper and cloth bindings. The three opening volumes, of which the first is ready, will be filled by Lady Charlotte Guest's beautiful collection of mediæval romances, 'The Mabinogion.'

The Coronation Bible will be used by the Archbishop of Canterbury in administering the oath to his Majesty in Westminster Abbey. The binding, which is being executed by the Oxford University Press, is a very handsome piece of work.

Under the title of 'The Bond of Empire,' Mr. M. G. Jessett, F.R.G.S., author of 'The Key to South Africa: Delagoa Bay,' &c., has in the press an important new work on the question of the day, Imperial Federation. The work treats of such subjects as the Empire, what it was, what it is, and what it should become; the questions of Imperial Federation; Imperial Trade under coming conditions; Chambers of Commerce; Imperial Mercantile Marine; an Imperial Council and Imperial Courts of Appeal. The book will be illustrated with many portraits and maps, and will be issued almost immediately by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.

Mr. Alfred Bowker, late Mayor of Winchester, has compiled a volume commemorative of the millenary celebration of King Alfred's birth, which Mr. Bowker was largely instrumental in organising. The book, published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. under the title of 'The King Alfred Millenary,' contains a reprint of all the principal speeches delivered at the preliminary meetings and during the ceremony, as well as a detailed account of the proceedings at Winchester, and of the subsequent honours paid to the king's memory in the United States. The volume is illustrated with photographs.

An exhibition of 'F.C.G.'s' admirable original drawings will be opened on Monday, June 23, at the Continental Gallery, 157 New Bond Street. The exhibition will include the tinted original illustrations of Mr. Gould's 'Froissart's Modern Chronicles' and a large number of the cartoons dealing with political events in 1901-1902 which have appeared in the Westminster Gazette. The original drawings of the illustrations to the popular 'Westminster Alice,' which are adaptations of Sir John Tenniel's famous work in Lewis Carroll's books, will also be on view.

We note that a new illustrated monthly known as Page's Magazine, which will be devoted to the Engineering, Shipbuilding, Electrical, and Mining Industries, will make its appearance on July 1. Mr. Davidge Page, until recently the English Director of Cassier's Magazine, assisted by five well-known specialists, will undertake the editorship. The magazine will be an essentially British production, with the advantage of American methods in just those directions in which they have proved themselves worthy of adoption. The journal will be issued by the Page Publishing Syndicate, Ltd., from their Offices at Clun House, Surrey Street, Strand, London, W.C.

A meeting to celebrate the twenty-sixth anniversary of the founding of the Bethnal Green Free Library was held on Thursday last, the Mayor of the borough (Mr. C. E. Fox) presiding in state. The report submitted first referred to the fact that the King would continue his patronage, that the Prince of Wales was a vice-patron, and the Princess of Wales a patroness. The committee made an earnest appeal for help, as at the present moment there were no available funds whatever.

In connection with the Anniversary Festival of the Printers' Pension Corporation, to be held at the Hotel Métropole, July 7, under the presidency of The Lord Glenesk, the Council are issuing an appeal to establish a Coronation Pension.

The July number of Good Words is a double number, containing the Prize Coronation Odes in the competition for the £75 in cash offered by the publishers. The success of the competition has been extraordinary. Over a thousand odes (1092) were received from all parts of the Empire. The judges have been Mr. Stopford A. Brooke, Mr. Edmund Gosse, and Mr. William Canton.

A new impression of Mr. Crockett's 'The Raiders,' completing the forty-third thousand, will be issued by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin next week, and also a new impression (the fifty-second thousand) of the Rev. E. J. Hardy's 'How to be Happy though Married.'

Mr. Elkin Mathews published on Monday last a poem by Mr. James Douglas, entitled 'Ode for the Coronation of King Edward VII.'

'SALE RECORDS.'

To the Booksellers of the United Kingdom.

GENTLEMEN,—It has long appeared to me to be a matter of vital importance that if a list of the prices should be printed for which rare books are sold at auction such lists should be supplied only to booksellers, and, with the able co-operation of Mr. Frederick Marchmont, I have decided to issue at my own cost and risk a quarterly publication entitled 'Sale Records.' This publication will be an exhaustive record, as, in addition to notices of all works which have realised £1 and upwards at auction, items which realise from 10s. to 19s. whose value might possibly, from their appearance, be overlooked by the trade will also be included. In every instance the buyers' names will be given. The quarterly numbers will be delivered to subscribers within seven days from the date of conclusion of the last sale for the current quarter, thus rendering the latest market changes immediately available, a fact which should greatly enhance the value of the Records from a trade point of view. The subscription has been fixed at the nominal sum of 1s. 6d. per quarter. The term 'subscribers' shall be deemed to comprise only bonâ-fide members of the trade, as I deprecate strongly the acquisition by the private buyer of what should be essentially trade information; for which reason the option of subscription will be strictly confined to members of the trade. Each quarterly number will carry an index for temporary reference, and with every fourth number a general index for the whole year, and title-page for binding purposes, will be supplied gratis. The first number will be published on or about September 8, 1902. May I appeal to every bookseller in the United Kingdom to support this venture, not for my sake, but for his own sake? The matter is taken up with no personal object or motive, but solely for the good of the trade, and it must stand or fall by the support which each of you gives to the first number, and that support involves the expenditure of one shilling and sixpence.

The London members of the trade are being canvassed, with the result to date that Mr. Quaritch, Messrs. Sotherton & Co., Messrs. Maggs Bros., Messrs. Jones & Evans, Mr. Batsford, Messrs. Henry Stevens, Mr. Dobell, Messrs. Bull & Auvache, Mr. Baker, Messrs. Hill & Son, Messrs. Bickers, and many other prominent firms, sixty-seven in number, have given their support. As the matter is one affecting the welfare of the trade, I am asking the editor to allow this statement to be made in place of issuing a circular by post, the cost of which circular would be a heavy one, and ought not to be borne by me alone, and I feel sure that you will appreciate the public spirit which allows the space for the printing of this appeal.

It is to be clearly understood that no request for payment is made in advance, and that you will only be asked to remit your subscriptions after the actual receipt of the first number, together with the cost of postage. As already stated, the London subscribers are sixty-seven in number, and it is computed that 450 subscribers in all will cover the cost of production. Will the remaining necessary 383 subscribers send me their names and addresses? If so, the programme outlined above shall be faithfully carried out. That programme has, as a matter of fact, been in operation since June 1, and a record of every sale since that date is now in the printer's hands. The advantage accruing to you from the success of this undertaking is so obvious to the meanest intellect that it is not necessary to add another word, except to emphasise the fact that the matter depends more upon your support than upon my efforts.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

SHAKESPEARIANA.

Here is an interesting item from the June Catalogue of Mr. Bertram Dobell, 77 Charing Cross Road, London:

373 Shakespeariana.—A CLOSELY WRITTEN POETICAL MANUSCRIPT OF ABOUT THE MIDDLE OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY, containing a large collection of Poems by well-known writers, many of which are unpublished, and others supplying fresh readings. Included in the volume are the EPIGRAMS OF THOMAS FULLER, 65 in number (6 more than are printed in Dr. Grosart's edition), POEMS BY CRASHAW, BENLOWES, RAVENSHAW, SHERBURNE, HOOKE, LLEWELLAN, and many others, and SOME OF THE SONNETS OF SHAKESPEARE. Also several of the Poems (here attributed to Shakespeare) which are found at the end of the 1640 edition of Shakespeare's Poems, but with textual variations from them as there printed, 16mo. original calf, UNIQUE AND IMPORTANT VOLUME, £160.

The extraordinary rarity of any even comparatively early manuscript matter having the remotest connection with Shakespeare is well known. A facsimile of one of the pages accompanies this catalogue, by which it will be seen that at least one of the Shakespeare sonnets differs in some respects from any printed version.

COST OF MAKING BOOKS INCREASING?

A New York publisher recently expressed the opinion that the cost of getting out new books has increased of late years, mainly because of the increase in the item of advertising. Referring to a complaint that libraries have to pay more for books than formerly, he said:

"The actual cost to the publishers of each book marketed to-day is quite different from what it was formerly. The elements making up this cost are: first, the actual manufacture; second, the cost of selling; third, the royalties. It is safe to say that in many parts of its manufacture the cost is largely increased. That part of the cost of selling which consists in sending travellers with samples all over the country means a debit to the expense account of a very considerable amount. In the old days the country was much smaller, and it was much oftener the custom of the buyers to make periodical visits to the buying centres. Now a representative of every publisher has to make frequent visits to his customers if he expects to hold any business relations with them.

"That part of the cost of marketing a book which consists of advertising is very far in excess of what was customary even a comparatively few years back. Apropos of this, I quote the following bits of gossip: One house that did some rather special advertising last fall for several books of moderate price is quoted as saying: "After all, we only spent $25,000 more than we have been in the habit of spending in similar groups of books!" The representative of another house is quoted as saying that they had sold 20,000 copies of a new book that had been largely advertised, but that the net result on the transaction was $264 profit! Good for the author, but not attractive to the publisher! The member of another house who spent a good deal in advertising a few new books that had a very fair sale is quoted as saying that each copy sold (the retail price being $1.50) represented a total cost of more than $6."

Letters to the Editor

NATIONAL BOOK TRADE PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

SIR,—As Mr. Brabrook informed me about a week ago that they wanted all views regarding the proposed Association, I beg to offer some remarks upon the report of the meeting in Manchester printed in your issue of the 14th inst.

Mr. Brabrook was good enough to say that he would read my letter to the meeting; but, as there was no reference to it in the report, I presume he did not find an opportunity to do so, hence my present effusion. I was requested to try to get the signatures of assistants approving of this proposed Association, and carried or sent the paper round the principal shops in town, accompanied by an explanation of my own views on this subject, with the result that not one would sign in favour of it.

It certainly was a tempting bait; all one had to do was to become a member, subscribe five shillings a year, and be assured of a pension. But is that the position a bookseller's assistant should take up in matters concerning his own and the welfare of others? I think not. If it could have been secured so easily as that, surely the canny Scot would have found that out before now.

The organisers could not have had a better chairman, whose age and experience entitle him to all honour and respect; but it is only right to point out that there was a misconception of certain words of mine in a former letter to you—something to the effect "that many might feel some uncertainty as to whether they would ever receive any benefit from the Society if they should require it". The leaving out of these last five words makes me responsible for opinions I do not hold. Mr. Cater in his remarks supports the ideas I had expressed about the ballot system, but which have been misconstrued.

Was it not rather disingenuous of Mr. Brabrook to say that he knew next to nothing about provident societies when we find it stated in the Bookseller for March that Mr. Brabrook had experience of such matters, as his father was 'Chief Registrar of the Friendly Societies Registry,' and accordingly was the very man to take up this business?

Mr. Brabrook goes to the extremes; the bulk of assistants are neither wealthy and healthy, nor poor and sick; but they have just enough to do with all their earnings if they wish to pay their way and save a little for sickness and old age, as most of them are no doubt doing; further, he reverses my proposals, reiterated from time to time, that assistants in every town should form themselves into associations for mutual improvement and social intercourse, and when they had learned to esteem and respect each others' opinions and merits, they would be able to find out what kind of a benefit association the assistants really wanted, which is certainly not known at present.

Regarding this Committee, where do the assistants come in? As far as I am able to judge by the names, there seems few, if any, on it; Messrs. Akerman, Cater, and Brabrook can hardly be classed as Booksellers' Assistants. Is this the way to gain the confidence of the assistants that this scheme is to be for their benefit?

In the first place, an Association for Assistants should consist of assistants, and not, as in the present instance, principally of employers, for the interests of the two classes are identical only to a certain degree; it is ludicrous to imply that the pension proposed, though sufficient for an assistant to aim at, would have any attraction for an employer; hence it looks as if the employers were being invited to become members for some ulterior object. It is hoped that large subscriptions will be got in to swell the funds; if this is so, what are the assistants to give in return? Sooner or later, some of the employers will take credit for supplying us with (prospective) pensions, and it will be an excuse, when a man asks a rise of wages, to be told that, as the employer is subscribing to this Association, he cannot afford to give an increase of salary as well; so that this scheme, which looks so cheap, may cost some pretty dear in the long run. These are not my own views only; they are endorsed by representative assistants in Edinburgh who have discussed this subject for years. There are many other points I could touch upon; but, as others may have something to say on this subject, I must not trespass further on your valuable space.

Yours faithfully,

D. HALDANE.

A WARNING.

DEAR SIR,—Can you help us by warning booksellers, printers, and newsagents against a W. Nichols, who produces a card with our name and obtains loans of amounts of a few shillings under various pretexts from booksellers and others in various towns?

We have numerous complaints from small printers who print the cards for him and never get paid, as well as from others, and he keeps constantly moving about from town to town, so that it is impossible to catch him. We have recently had complaints from Bath, Reading, and Hastings.

Your kind co-operation in the above will be much esteemed by

Yours faithfully,

'TRADE CHANGE.'

DEAR SIR,—It was stated in last week's issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, under the above heading, that I had been for 'many years' with Messrs. Freemantle & Co. As the firm has not been in existence more than three years, it was an error to say that I had represented them 'many years.' I still represent Messrs. Freemantle & Co., and shall continue to offer their books to the trade.—I am, yours faithfully,

T. S. CLARK.

NATIONAL BOOK TRADE PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

The Sub-Committee appointed at the inaugural meeting on June 7 to draw up a set of Rules met on Friday, June 13.

The result of their work will be submitted to the general Committee for consideration.

The next meeting of the Sub-Committee will be on Friday, July 4.

As soon as this difficulty is surmounted a general meeting of the trade will be called to revise and confirm the work of the Sub-Committee.

Numerous applications coming to hand for copies of the Rules: these will be duly attended to as soon as they are ready.

This intimation is sent as it is impossible to reply to individual applications.

CHARLES HERBERT TESTIMONIAL FUND.

DEAR SIR,—We have the pleasure to enclose you the third and final list of subscribers to the above fund, which now amounts in all to £266. 7s. 6d.

This being insufficient to purchase an annuity, the money has been placed with two trustees—Mr. H. H. Hodgson, of 115 Chancery Lane, and Mr. H. E. Mills, Law Stationer (an old personal friend of Mr. Herbert's)—who will pay the money to Mr. Herbert in quarterly or other instalments. A proper trust deed has been drawn by a solicitor, and contingencies have been duly provided for.

We take this opportunity to express our best thanks to all subscribers who have so kindly assisted us with this testimonial.

We also desire to express our thanks to the Editor and the Proprietors of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR for inserting the 'Appeal' and list of subscribers without any charge.

We are dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

Coronation Books and Special Numbers.

THE BRITISH NAVY: a Souvenir of the Coronation of King Edward VII., by E. N. Hartnoll, A.M.I.N.A. London: Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.

A vast amount of interesting and valuable information respecting the dimensions, tonnage, power, speed, complement, and armament of the various ships in our navy is compressed into this beautiful illustrated volume, and the work is sold at a price which, like one of Mr. Maskelyne's conjuring tricks, causes us to wonder how it is done. The book is not simply a list of the representative ships in the navy, but of all the ships, and its contents range from first-class battleships to Royal Naval Reserve merchant cruisers. Even the various tugs, tank vessels, &c. employed on harbour service are included. The work of compilation must have been very laborious, and we may congratulate Mr. Hartnoll on the highly successful result of his efforts. The illustrations form a great attraction of the volume. Most of these are reproduced from photographs, and thus possess a realism that it would be impossible to obtain from mere drawings. The pictures of the 30-knot Destroyer at full speed and the First-Class Torpedo Boat No. 75 are especially lifelike. A full index completes the many good qualities of the publication, which, if merit goes for anything, should have a wide success.

THE CORONATION OF KING EDWARD VII.:
a Picture. London: G. W. Bacon & Co., Limited.

To issue a picture of the forthcoming Coronation before the actual event has taken place is surely a little anticipatory; but we live in stirring times. Accompanying the plate is a key-plan, explaining who the different personages are. Some of the portraits are fairly lifelike, and may easily be recognised without aid from a guide; but of the majority this can hardly be said, the artist having in the plenitude of his benevolence insisted on depicting his characters as much younger than they actually are. However, colour is very much to the fore, and the gorgeousness of the scene can scarcely be disputed. In many circles no doubt the picture will meet with a gratifying amount of approval.

THE 'ART JOURNAL' CORONATION
NUMBER, June 1902. London: H. Virtue & Co., Ltd., 13 Henrietta Street, W.C.

It was a happy thought on the part of the conductors of the Art Journal to publish in the form of a Coronation Number an authoritative account of the King's art treasures, written by his Majesty's official representatives, and illustrated with some seventy reproductions of the chief pictures, miniatures, and pieces of historic armour in the collections at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace. Among the many special magazine issues devoted to the all-important subject of the moment, none, we make bold to say, will be read with greater interest or be found to impart more exclusive information. Unfortunately, considerations of space prevent us from referring to each article in detail, and it must be sufficient to say that Mr. Lionel Cust writes on 'The King's Collections of Works of Art'; Mr. Richard R. Holmes describes 'The King's Prints Drawings, Miniatures, and Gems at Windsor Castle'; and to Mr. Guy Francis Laking falls the subject of the 'Unrecorded Armour and Arms in the European Armoury at Windsor Castle.' The remaining contributions are 'Some Illustrations of Coronations,' by H. M. Cundall, 'Westminster Abbey,' by A. Yockney, 'Coronation Weaving,' by R. E. D. Sketchley, and 'Coronation Medals,' by George Frampton, R.A., and E. Fuchs. The magazine has been enlarged for this issue to forty pages, and in addition to the pictures already mentioned there are portraits on plate paper of his Majesty King Edward VII. and her Majesty Queen Alexandra, from the pictures by E. Wehrschmidt and Luke Fildes, R.A. respectively, an original etching by A. Hermann

Haig, R.E., of Westminster Abbey, and finely printed reproductions of Gainsborough's 'Royal Princesses' and Sir George Hayter's 'Coronation of Queen Victoria.'

SONGS OF ENGLAND'S GLORY: a Collection of Poems and Ballads relating to the Noblest Episodes of our National History. Coronation Edition. London: Isbister & Co.

The extremely pretty exterior of this volume in its lambskin binding of royal blue with gold lettering is well worthy of the care and good judgment displayed in the selection of the contents. Many old and highly esteemed friends greet us as we pass along its well-printed pages. 'Ye Mariners of England,' by Thomas Campbell; 'Hearts of Oak,' by David Garrick; 'A Song of England,' by Charles Mackay; 'Scots who hae wi' Wallace bled,' by Robert Burns; 'The Spanish Armada,' by Lord Macaulay; 'Bonnie Dundee,' by Sir Walter Scott; 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' by Lord Tennyson; and others, to wit. Nor are more recent writers unrepresented, for towards the end of the volume we come across that beautiful poem, 'England, my England,' by W. E. Henley; 'The Going of the Battery,' by Thomas Hardy; and the lines in memory of Cecil John Rhodes written by Sir Edwin Arnold so late as April of the present year. The little book is one that will awaken quite a patriotic glow in the mind of the reader, and the man or woman who can resist its infectious influence must be phlegmatic and cold-hearted indeed.

NAVY LEAGUE GUIDE TO THE CORONATION REVIEW, June 28, 1902. London: Navy League Office, 13 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

This is a very attractive little work, which supplies a variety of information in regard to our great sea force, accompanied by numerous illustrations of the various foreign battleships and armoured cruisers that will take part in the forthcoming display at Spithead. There are also pictures of the more important British ships, portraits of the King, the Prince of Wales, and several of the chief naval officers, representations of the 6-inch and 7.5-inch quick-firing guns, &c. Among the articles are 'Our Naval Position,' by Sir Charles W. Dilke; 'Previous Naval Reviews,' by H. W. Wilson; 'Spithead, June 28, 1902,' by Julian S. Corbett; 'The Feeding of the Fleet,' by Arnold White; 'Our First Line of Defence,' by Archibald Hurd; and papers from Admiral Fremantle, F. T. Bullen, Commander Henry N. Shore, and Benedict W. Ginsburg. Rudyard Kipling and Harold Begbie contribute appropriate poems. To those who contemplate being present at the Review the concluding article on 'The Ships at Spithead' will be especially interesting and useful. The entire work confers great credit on those responsible for its production, and bears gratifying testimony to the patriotic spirit in this country.

COUNTRY LIFE (George Newnes, Limited) contains an interesting article in its issue for June 7 on 'The King as a Sportsman.' This is illustrated with portraits of Persimmon, Diamond Jubilee, Perdita II., and other racehorses belonging to his Majesty. Another paper treats of the King in his aspect of country gentleman, the illustrations being of cattle and shire-horses. In 'Sandringham, the Country Home of H.M. King Edward VII.,' readers may glean some interesting particulars respecting the interior of Sandringham House and the many magnificent rooms that it contains. The article is accompanied by a large number of beautiful pictures, which afford a very graphic idea of the character of the house and its surroundings. This publication, in the comprehensive view it takes of sport and all that concerns the interests of the wealthier classes, should be assured of a hearty welcome in every country house.

ODE ON THE DAY OF THE CORONATION OF KING EDWARD VII., by Wm. Watson. London and New York: John Lane. 1902.

Mr. Watson's ode is very good, and yet to his admirers perhaps a little disappointing. It has dignity, grace of expression, and great metrical excellence, but it hardly rises to the height of the occasion. In his opening lines the author strikes a lofty note, and arouses an anticipation of many beautiful thoughts to follow—

Sire, we have looked on many and mighty things

In these eight hundred summers of renown
Since the Gold Dragon of the Wessex Kings
On Hastings field went down;
And slowly in the ambience of this crown
Have many crowns been gathered, till, to-day,
How many peoples crown thee, who shall say?
Time, and the ocean, and some fostering star,
In high cabal have made us what we are,
Who stretch one hand to Huron's bearded pines,
And one on Kashmir's snowy shoulder lay,
And round the streaming of whose raiment shines

The iris of the Australasian spray.

But the fine thoughts never come, though the ode is by no means deficient in qualities of imagination, and it is not till the close that the writer, in warning England to preserve her greatness, again shows something of a spirit of inspired poesy.

Already is doom a-spinning, if unstirred
In leisure of ancient pathways she lose touch
Of the hour, and overmuch
Recline upon achievements, and be slow
To take the world arriving, and forget
How perilous are the stature and port that so Invite the arrows, how unslumbering all
The hates that watch and crawl.

THE 'LADIES' FIELD' CORONATION
NUMBER, Saturday, June 14, 1902. London: George Newnes, Limited.

It would be impossible in the small space at our disposal to describe all the many attractions of this bulky number. They range from descriptions of Crowns and Regalia to the account of famous stage impersonations of royalty. Unfortunately, our enjoyment of all these good things is considerably lessened by the fact that we are obliged in their consumption to swallow an unpalatable quantity of advertising matter. Pictures of young ladies in tailor-made costumes are all very well, and are doubtless exceedingly interesting to many, but the centre of attraction is the Coronation, and we are anxious with the least trouble to ourselves to learn all we can about it. Variety, however, is at all times very charming, and so the editor has not restricted his contributors too closely to the main lines of his subject, but has allowed them to explore the many bypaths and side walks. Among the articles we have 'The Crowns and Regalia of England,' 'School Days of Queen Alexandra,' 'Coronation Vestments, Old and New,' 'Foreign Representatives at the Court of St. James's,' 'The Queen's Favourite Dogs,' 'The King's Book Plates,' 'Famous Royal Portraits,' 'Coronation Customs and Relics in France,' 'Sports and Playthings of Kings and Queens,' 'English Coronation Medals,' 'The Coronation of Living Rulers,' 'Coronation Lace,' 'The History and Evolution of the Royal Arms,' &c. By comparison with such a huge mass of material, swelled out by advertisements, the ordinary number of the paper, which is enclosed under a separate cover, looks quite small and insignificant. As for the illustrations, they disport themselves on every page, four or five and even more at a time, and occasionally they assume coloured proportions and stand out as separate plates. In this fashion the King appears, not only once but twice, in the second instance accompanied (on thin satin) by the Queen.

THE CORONATION REGALIA, by W. H. Stackpoole, LL.D. London: John Macqueen, 49 Rupert Street, W.

In the six chapters composing this little work the author very agreeably discourses of the ancient and the modern Regalia, the place of Coronation, the origin of Crowns, St. Edward's Crown, the Coronation Stone, the Coronation Chair, and the remaining articles of the Regalia properly so-called. Occasionally there is little repetition—as on pages 20 and 34, where the inventory of the Regalia of ancient days now in Westminster Abbey is twice given—and on the whole greater attention to the arrangement of the book would have been an advantage, but it is nevertheless interesting after its kind. Among the illustrations are representations of the Scotch Coronation chair captured by King Edward I., St. Edward's crowns, the Cap of Maintenance, Stone of Destiny, Coronation Chair in the time of King James II., Coronation Chair as it is at present, Queen Mary's chair (renovated), and Queen Mary's Coronation Chair before renovation.

THE CORONATION BOOK, OR THE HALLOWING OF THE SOVEREIGNS OF ENGLAND, by Jocelyn H. T. Perkins, M.A. Illustrated by Zillah Temple, together with reproductions of numerous ancient prints. London: Isbister & Co., Ltd. 1902.

The object to which the author has applied himself in this handsome volume is 'to convey, by means of a series of separate, though connected pictures, as vivid an impression as possible of the splendid ceremonial which once surrounded the "hallowing" of our English monarchs, and of which only a fragment remains to-day.' In such a scheme, as may readily be imagined, the illustrations play no insignificant part, and accordingly we find that they are not only numerous, but that they have obviously been the subject of great attention, both in their drawing and reproduction. Those which are original reflect great credit on the artist, and give an appearance of novelty to the book which, considering the great output of Coronation volumes, is rather refreshing. There are some twenty chapters in the work, treating of the Regalia of England, the Regalia of Scotland, the Coronation Chair, the Coronation Vestments, the principal Ecclesiastical Officers of the Coronation, the Great Officers of State, the inferior Lay Officers, the Grand Procession from the Tower of London to the Palace of Westminster, the Coronation Procession, the Recognition, the Coronation Oath and the Ancient Book of the Gospels, the Solemn Anointing of the Sovereign, the Crowning of the King, the Banquet in Westminster Hall, and kindred matters. The book is a great advance on many of the Coronation treatises we have read, and equally in respect of its writing, illustrations, and all-round production is worthy of high praise.

THE KING CORONATION NUMBER (London: George Newnes, Limited) is a capital production, containing much interesting information concerning 'The Memorable Coronations of Three Centuries,' and illustrated with many reproductions of curious old prints. Among the latter are pictures of King James I. in his Coronation Robes, Charles II. ditto, the Coronation of Charles II. in Westminster Abbey, Ogilvy's View of the Coronation Procession of Charles II., Sandford's View of the Performance of the Challenge at the Coronation of James II., the Coronation of James II., Westminster Abbey as arranged for the Coronation of James II., the Crowning of George II. and Queen Caroline of Anspach, the last Coronation Banquet in Westminster Hall, the Ceremony of the Homage in the Theatre of Westminster Abbey, the Coronation of George IV., and the Coronation of Queen Victoria. The general illustrations of the number include portraits of Madame Jane Hading, Madame Rejane, Madame Melba, Miss Lily Brayton, Miss Bircham (of the Alhambra), Signor Enrico Caruso, and the Right Hon. R. J. Seddon, Prime Minister of New Zealand. There seems to be something in the number to interest everyone.

THE CROWNING OF MONARCHS, by the Very Rev. A. P. Purey Cust, D.D. London: Isbister & Co., Ltd. 1902.

This little work originally appeared in Good Words some five years ago, but in the present reprint it has been carefully revised. It possesses rather more literary merit than is usual in books of its class, and in this is a distinct improvement on the ordinary recital of crude, indigested facts. The author weaves his account of the crowning of monarchs as practised in the earliest times down to the present day into something of a connected story, and the reader can follow him to the end without being continually jolted and unrailed on the way. It is an interesting little volume.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Path to Rome,' by H. Belloc. This is a book to be commended to all in search of pleasant reading, not one to be criticised. Indeed, after the greeting in the preliminary chapter, headed 'Praise of the Book,' what reviewer could be so hard-hearted as to criticise it? It is hard to say whether the story of how it came to be written, told in that same chapter, may be taken literally, for the book is as full of banter as that famous book of travel 'Sterne's Sentimental Journey through France and Italy,' from which it differs in two respects—viz. in really taking its readers to Rome, while Sterne did not take his to Italy, and in not needing to be bowdlerised. Whatever was the cause of the pilgrimage on foot from Toul to Rome, readers have cause to be thankful that it was successfully made, inasmuch as to the pilgrimage they owe this delightful gossip book, to convey any adequate idea of which were impossible except by making extracts—a step we are forbidden to take by conditions of space and by a desire to send readers to the book itself, which abounds in bright and glowing descriptions, shrewd sketches of character, good stories, and quaint and whimsical fancies, and is illustrated by many clever and beautiful pictures. There is one capital story which has a special interest for booksellers, and may be found on pp. 415 to 419, and its hero is Mr. Benjamin Franklin Hard, of Cincinnati, O., for we cannot think the Bookseller Fingle a hero, although he could 'say a plain thing in a plain way.'

From Mr. Howard Wilford Bell.—'Days in the Isle of Wight,' by Paul Bourget; the English version by M. C. Warrilow. There is really very little to be said about this slender volume, and readers are evidently expected to have a very exalted opinion of wide margins and an artistic production. M. Bourget's views are expressed with poetic grace and the polished courtesy of his countrymen, to which the translator has given full effect. The repast is dainty, but not altogether satisfying.

From The Cambridge University Press.—'Madame Thérèse,' by Erckmann-Chatrian, recited with introduction and notes by Arthur Reed Ropes, M.A. ('Pitt Press' series.) If this is scarcely the most important or most interesting of the Erckmann-Chatrian stories, it possesses qualities that render it excellently adapted for school purposes. The style is easy and colloquial, and the historical element is never introduced to such an extent as to become tedious. The scene of the story is laid in a village of the Vosges, just over the border of France, at a time (1793) when the fate of the Republic hung in the balance, and, but for the dissensions among the allied forces, would have been decided in favour of her opponents. Only once, however, do we get a picture of the actual war, this being when a fight rages in the market-place; but the distant rumbling of the cannon is frequently heard. The text of the present edition is that of the 'Collection Hetzel,' by arrangement with Messrs. Hachette & Co., and the work has been carefully edited by Mr. Ropes, who has contributed a well written introduction and some highly serviceable notes. A map also adds to the usefulness of the volume, which, like all the Cambridge University Press productions, is remarkably neatly printed and bound.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.—'Gladys Fane: a Story of Two Lives,' by Wemyss Reid. The eighth edition of this work calls for something more than mere mention of its publication. The story is bound to captivate the reader, not only by reason of its varied incident but on account of the excellent character study. It is now nearly twenty years since the book was first published, and that it should retain so much of its original interest is a powerful testimony to the ability of the author and the knowledge he possesses of general humanity.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Between Ourselves: Some of the Little Problems of Life,' by Max O'Rell. It is always worth while to read a book by Max O'Rell; for he is often brilliant and witty, and never dull. In the book before us one is at once struck by the heading of the first chapter, 'The World is Beautiful.' But when we begin to read we find this: 'In our family life in France we preach a delightful philosophy. We preach the gospel, the duty, of cheerfulness. This is not the sort of gospel which is usually taught in England.' There is very much that is true and beautiful in this chapter about domestic life in France, but we fear much might be written about the seamy side of French home life. Judging from the frequent mention of dollars in the first and subsequent chapters, it is not unwarrantable to conclude that such chapters were read to Transatlantic auditors; and we therefore suppose Max O'Rell was justified in saying to them that he never regretted taking the ladies of his family after the theatre back to the hotel through the streets of New York. 'In London (the English must forgive me for saying so, but they know it is the truth), I have to see that the carriage is brought right opposite the door, so that I may quickly push my ladies inside and take them home like criminals, to spare them a minute's sight of the London West End nights.' It is no use gainsaying this; and it is no credit to our London ediles that such a state of things exists. Max O'Rell gives excellent advice to his auditors or readers. He says to them: 'Be cheerful; be thankful you are alive. Rejoice; be happy; make as many people happy as you can. Live well and live long. You will never have another chance.' Although we do not endorse the placing of the writings of Josh Billings and Artemus Ward above those of Thomas Carlyle, 'who scolds the world for trying to be cheerful and happy,' we have no hesitation in recommending this bright and cheery book as one to be read and not merely skimmed, and as deserving a place in the library of those who haply possess one.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'The Battle Ground,' by Ellen Glasgow. It is a little difficult to express one's appreciation of this extremely refined, tender novel in sufficiently sympathetic terms, or to analyse the exact causes of its pleasurable influence. It is not that the character of Betty Ambler, so carefully traced from a child, with its infinite piquancy and sparkling coquetry, stands out in such an entrancing manner, or that the nature of that high-souled Virginian gentleman 'Marse Peyton' is so finely contrasted with his no less distinguished neighbour, Major Lightfoot, as that the whole narrative is bathed, as it were, in a subdued, soft-coloured light that takes possession of the senses. Towards the close, it is true, the events assume a more tragic aspect, seeing that they are concerned with the great Civil War in America; but though the incidents are thrilling, and the author has thrown herself into the description of the scenes of battle with a strength and realistic force that are unusual in a woman, the refined treatment is still there, and the idealisation of Dan's love for Betty is ever foremost in the picture. After the tumult of the preceding chapters, the conclusion seems to fall a little flat; but when Betty compels Dan in a way that is all sweet and womanly to conquer his pride in his great love of her, the curtain falls on one of the most fascinating stories of American life that we have read for many a long day. The cover of the book is ornamented with a portrait of Betty that adds still further to our admiration for that charming maid.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Recreations and Reflections, being Middles from the Saturday Review.' This volume of essays by the Saturday staff is dedicated by Mr. Harold Hodge, the editor, in rather a pretty piece of writing to his friend, the Earl of Hardwicke. The contents, he tells him, are 'our lighter thoughts, reflections upon all sorts of men and things, pleasant things and interesting men, and reflections of the easy happy kind that bind no one and the reflector least of all.' On turning to the succeeding pages we find this statement well substantiated in the work of Mr. Max Beerbohm, who writes of 'A Triple Bill'; of Mr. John F. Runciman, who has something to say concerning 'Chopin and the Sick Men' and 'The Acting of Tristan and Isolde'; of Mr. Arthur Symonds, who supplies some characteristic sketches of Cornish life; of Mr. Selwyn Image, whose attention is greatly taken up with flowers; of Mr. Arthur A. Baumann, who discourses on 'The Goodly Company of Duffers,' 'The Importance of Good Manners,' and 'The Dr. Johnson of our Days,' meaning thereby the late Professor Jowett; of Mr. Churton Collins, Mr. Herbert Vivian, Mr. R. Cunningham Graham, Mr. John F. Macdonald, Mr. George A. B. Dewar, Mr. Harold Hodge, and others. All these writers fully bear out the editor's contention that they contemplate life in a leisurely fashion—indeed, we could almost imagine that many of these gentle philosophies were issued from the comfortable recesses of an arm-chair. They are interesting, but, truth to tell, in the present multiplicity of books scarcely worthy of reproduction. Mr. Algernon Charles Swinburne contributes a short poem to the volume.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'The Viking Strain,' by A. G. Hales. Mr. Hales begins his first work of fiction in the good old style. In the first chapter we are introduced to Tom Westwood and his cousin Polly. Tom's father has just died and left his son nothing but a cottage, a thousand pounds, a colt and two fillies, whereas the youngster had expected to find himself the owner of Gedding Manor. He is twenty-two years of age and Polly is fourteen. Everything is as it should be: the proverbial Jew who has bought the whole place is found strolling about the grounds; Tom has vague notions about getting the manor back before he dies; and Polly is very sympathetic. We have read it all scores of times. But if the opening chapters are stereotyped, the same cannot be said of the rest of the book. When once Mr. Hales gets his hand in, he is a by no means bad companion, though we must confess we had anticipated better work than this from the pen of a man who has made himself famous by his brilliant letters as a war correspondent.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Champion,' by Mary L. Pendered and Alice Stronach. It would be a little difficult to analyse the masterful influence that some men seem to possess over women, causing them to become helplessly fascinated even when their intellectual faculties rebel against the degrading thralldom. Such a woman is Everich Lyndhurst, the principal character in this story. She goes up to the North of Scotland with the object of teaching in a country school, and chance throws her in contact with a bold handsome Highland laird, who inspires her with an admiration that all the passionate reasoning of her solitary hours will not lessen. These opening chapters are the best part of the work. After a desperate scene in a lonely cottage, when the struggle between Everich and Glentalla reaches its culminating point, and the girl escapes from his dangerous advances more by good fortune than through her own strength, the interest falls away. Glentalla takes to drink, and rapidly becomes a complete wreck, with a celerity that can only be compared to the inebriation of people on the stage. Before this, however, he has tried to get rid of his invalid wife by placing her in the hands of an unscrupulous nurse, with whom he is at the same time carrying on an intrigue. The real character of the nurse is exposed by a baronet in the neighbourhood, and she makes a hurried flight, taking with her some papers belonging to Glentalla which show, among other disreputable things, that he has no right to be considered Chief of the clan MacNeil—the title belonging to another young man of scarcely inferior good looks, and certainly infinitely better disposition, whom Everich subsequently marries. By most readers acquainted with Scotland the great charm of the story will be found in its glowing descriptions of Highland life and character. These are so faithful that they are bound to hold the attention. Next possibly to Everich, the being that will inspire greatest interest is a lively Scotch lassie who under an impudent masculine exterior conceals a really good nature and affectionate womanly disposition, and the evolution of this character forms an exceedingly engrossing feature of the book.

From Mr. John Long.—'In the Shadow of the Purple,' by George Gilbert. The author describes his book as 'a royal romance'; the royal personage in question is George IV. Mrs. Fitzherbert, the king's mistress, is a prominent character, and the story is founded on fact. It is carefully written, well thought out, and is an honest piece of work, and yet it fails to convince. The author is sometimes exceedingly trivial, and his occasional lapses into vulgarity spoil the narrative. His creations do not live: they are merely lay-figures, and do not interest us. This is a pity, as it is evident Mr. Gilbert has spent considerable time and care over his work.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'The Hinderers: a Story of the Present Time,' by Edna Lyall. On January 22, 1901, Lieutenant Frank Warren calls at Government House, Espaniere, to pay his respects to the aged Governor, Sir George St. Croix, and his granddaughter Irene. Seven years had passed since he last saw them, and had then proposed to Irene St. Croix, who regretfully but firmly rejected him that she might cheer her grandfather's declining years; then, after four years, the naval officer had married, and has now a wife and child in London. After welcoming his visitor, Sir George anxiously inquires after the health of the Queen, and says: 'This accursed war has hastened her end.' Presently the Chief Justice appears on the scene, and announces that her Majesty passed away at half-past six that evening. The octogenarian Governor, who is in failing health, is so overwhelmed by the sad news that he himself shortly afterwards expires. Four months later Irene is in England as the guest at Park Lane, London, or at Michelhurst, of Squire Brooklin, cousin of Sir George St. Croix and one of his trustees and executors. At the house in Park Lane Irene meets the squire's nephew, Victor Brooklin, gifted with artistic talent, but, having at twenty-one inherited a comfortable income, had since only dabbled in painting until, at thirty-five, ill-health obliged him to quit Bohemian life and take up his abode with Mr. and Mrs. Brooklin. He obtains Irene's permission to paint her portrait, and falls in love with her; but, afterwards, when seven leading London doctors only give him six months' lease of life and he discovers that Irene likes Sir Christopher Hope, aged sixty, a well known literary man and member for Northwall, he resolves to bring about a match between them, and does so on his death bed, when mortally wounded from injuries sustained while saving his nephew Hal's life. The description of the house party at Michelhurst Manor, and the episode of Lady Newminster and Ambrose Bray seem very present-day-life like. Indeed, Mr. G. W. E. Russell's true picture of smart society observance of Sunday in country houses contained in his 'Onlooker's Note-Book' quite substantiates Edna Lyall's fiction. But, while the story is well told, as might be expected when Edna Lyall is the story teller, and the characters are well drawn, the principal topic of conversation is, unfortunately, the Boer war, and much of the talk is only a feeble echo of the charges brought against the British by some of the continental newspapers and Boer sympathisers in this country and abroad, so that one experiences a feeling of weariness when reading repetitions of charges so often authoritatively refuted. However, when all is said and done the book is one to be read.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Lorna Doone,' by R. D. Blackmore. The issue of a new sixpenny edition of this fascinating novel, so descriptive of the historic aspect of Devonshire life, the characteristics of its people and the beauty of its scenery, must be a perfect boon to the countless thousands whose worldly possessions are not commensurate with their craving for the best authors. That such is the case is evidenced by the fact that no less than 150,000 copies were sold of the previous cheap edition. We ourselves feel the natural envy of the man who has enjoyed the first keen zest of a pleasure himself, and now watches other people thronging to the doors of the enchanting treasure house. It is a little undignified in such a connection to refer to the comparatively commonplace, but none the less important, questions of printing and binding, but these are excellent, and the pictorial binding is exceptionally effective.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'English Men of Letters,' edited by John Morley. 'George Eliot,' by Leslie Stephen. Forty-five years ago, Charles Dickens, always generously eager to welcome and acclaim a literary aspirant with anything in him, wrote to his friend and future biographer, John Forster, calling his attention to the first two of the three stories then appearing in Blackwood's Magazine, and published in a volume as 'Scenes of Clerical Life' the next year, 1858. 'Do read them,' he wrote. 'They are the best things I have seen since I began my course.' Of all the distinguished writers to whom Miss Evans's first essays in fiction were submitted by Mr. John Blackwood, it was Dickens alone who thought their author must be a woman. In this new volume of the 'English Men of Letters,' so ably edited by Mr. John Morley, we have a charming biography of the gifted novelist, who showed in all her work such a wide sympathy, 'which,' as her biographer remarks, 'was perhaps her most characteristic quality.' Every reader of the series of romances which began in 1857 with the 'Scenes of Clerical Life,' and ended in 1876 with 'Daniel Deronda,' should read this admirable story of George Eliot's life and works. For Mr. Stephen, while allowing that 'Adam Bede' placed its author in the first rank of Victorian novelists, is no mere slavish admirer but a judicious critic, and at the same time a tolerant biographer. George Eliot and her works receive absolute justice at the hands of her biographer, who has here given a model of what a literary biography ought to be.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Ten Thousand Miles in Persia, or Eight Years in Iran,' by Major Percy Molesworth Sykes (Queen's Bays). The impression at first produced by a perusal of this volume has relation to the great industry displayed by the author and the infinite pains he has evidently taken to study his subject, and to present as exhaustive a summary of it as possible. Perhaps it would have been as well, so far as the popularity of his work is concerned, if he had been a little lighter in treatment. The humours of the various situations in which he found himself seem to have struck him but slightly, but an appreciation of them would have imparted variety and zest to his narrative. However this, considering that the book is generally so interesting and instructive, savours of hyper-criticism. The author lays claim to no highly polished literary style, and in the plain unvarnished account of what he experienced and observed during his travels and residence in Persia, the chief merit of his work consists. He describes in the first place his journey from England to Astrabad, then his experiences among the Turkoman, across the Lut to Kermán, in the province of that name, during his stay in Baluchistan, while passing through Central Persia, and so forth, his travels not only taking him to the city of Kermán, which may be said to have been the centre of his investigations, but to Kuhak, Quetta, the Kárun Valley, Shiraz, Ispahán, Sistán, and numerous other places of interest. The illustrations, of which there are upwards of sixty, including maps, form a prominent attraction of the work, and aid in giving distinction to a book that in its general characteristics is well worthy of attention.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Lovers of Yvonne,' by Rafael Sabatini. Another clever novel of stirring and exciting incident; but how much does the author owe to Messrs. Hope and Weyman? It relates the story of the redemption of a scapegrace gamester by the charming but haughty lady whom he is forced to treat badly. It is told in the first person, and the ending may best be revealed by the following quotation from the last page. 'Yvonne!' 'Gaston!' Mr. Sabatini writes dramatically, and there is not a dull page in the whole book; and, after all, that is no little thing to achieve.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'The Shears of Fate,' by Harold Tremayne. It is sincerely to be hoped that all ladies who marry under a misapprehension as to their husband's disposition, and afterwards find out their mistake, will not take example by Mignon Atkinson, of this story, and fabricate their own deaths that they may run away with previous lovers. This, however, is what Mignon does; her canoe, bottom uppermost, is found in the sea at Plymouth, and she is supposed to have been drowned, during which time she is sailing in her lover's yacht for France; and not only does she thus spread the report of her death, but after some years she actually returns to this country, and boldly faces her husband (who has married again) and her former friends, only one of whom recognises her! This old lady—a relative—when on her death-bed makes Mignon promise to confess everything at a future date, and with the disclosure of her duplicity the story comes to an end. On the whole, however, Mignon seems to suffer little from her wrong-doing. She is thoroughly happy with her lover—no husband could be more devoted and affectionate—in the eyes of the world they are a married couple, and it is only on his death that she is called upon to make reparation. The real one to suffer is Mr. Atkinson's second wife. The story has many good qualities, but, as can be gathered from the outline we have given, is a little far-fetched and risky in conception.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'My Strangest Case,' by Guy Boothby. Whatever one may say against the literary methods of Mr. Boothby, it is evident he possesses the power of arousing one's interest at the very outset of his tales, and this interest he keeps until the last page is reached. His latest novel opens in the Hotel of the Three Desires, Singapore. 'Night was falling on one of the hottest days of the year, when a man entered the hotel and inquired for the proprietor. . . . The stranger gave a ravenish sort of croak, which might have been a laugh or anything else, and then went in and closed the door behind him.' Then come excursions and alarms in Mr. Boothby's best style, and the reader gives a gasp on every second page. It is all very exciting, very impossible, and very absurd; but of its kind it is the best. Can we say more?

From the same.—'The Lost Square,' by L. T. Meade and Robert Eustace. We read the first chapter (48 pages) of this amazing book, and our patience was thoroughly exhausted. It seemed to us tawdry rubbish, and we are afraid we can say nothing in its favour. It is a mere breathless list of absurdities without anything to redeem it in the way of interest or good writing.

NEW EDITIONS.—From Messrs. George Bell & Sons we have received 'Aurora Leigh,' by Mrs. E. B. Browning, which may be purchased for the price of one shilling. It is prettily bound and well printed, being the fourteenth volume in Messrs. Bell's series of 'Life and Light Books.'—Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have issued Molière's 'Le Misanthrope' in a neat and handy form.—From Mr. Grant Richards we have received a copy of Charlotte Brontë's 'Shirley.'—Messrs. A. Treherne & Co., Ltd., have just published Mrs. Craik's 'John Halifax' at a popular price.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, send post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

'Unquestionably capital pens. . . Beautifully soft and fluent writing pens.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 660 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

MORANG'S ANNUAL REGISTER OF CANADIAN AFFAIRS

Edited by J. CASTELL HOPKINS, F.S.S., F.R.Hist. S., Author of 'The Story of the Dominion' &c.

THE object of this work is to describe the annual development of Canadian interests, and to supply a yearly historical record of Canadian affairs. The principal Sections in the volume for 1901 cover a wide range of fact and figures and interesting incident. There are sections dealing with Agriculture, the Mines, the Forests, and the Fisheries. The Section relating to Manufacturing Industries covers various phases of the development now going on as a result of the recent investments of American capital in Canada. Banking and military affairs are fully dealt with. The Section dealing with Trade and Commerce includes:—The British Preferential Tariff; the Preference and the Woollen Industry; the Preference and Relations with Germany; Parliament and the Preferential Tariff; Preferential Trade within the British Empire; Trade Relations with Foreign Countries.

Upon all the questions mentioned in these and other Sections, every important reference in Parliament, in the press, or in public speeches during the year is quoted—sometimes in full. The South African War Section covers matters such as Parliament and the War and the dispatch and return of the various Contingents. The Royal Tour is fully covered. The Section dealing with Education is elaborate in treatment, and covers every Province and the record of all the higher institutions of learning during the year. Religious or moral questions, such as Temperance and Prohibition, are fully dealt with. Upon the latter subject every important reference in press, or pulpit, or Parliament during 1901 is given, so that information is easily obtainable as to the views and opinions of public men. A vast fund of miscellaneous information, extracts from Official Reports and Documents, and details bearing upon the events of the day, are also to be found under appropriate and accessible headings.

THE ATTACK ON COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

In view of the persistent efforts which are being made in Canada to upset Imperial Copyright, we think it well to give some extracts from a large amount of correspondence which recent action on the part of the Toronto Board of Trade has given rise to in the Canadian Press, especially in the Toronto Globe, the leading Canadian paper, which we are glad to say has taken a very impartial position on the question.

VISIT OF THE COLONIAL PREMIERS TO ENGLAND.

Although there can be no doubt their time will be very fully occupied in discussing subjects of prime importance to the Empire which have already been arranged, it surely would be a good thing and time well spent if the Colonial Premiers could have a friendly conference on the delicate question of Colonial Copyright before they disperse to the four quarters of the globe. We feel assured that one most important result of such a conference would be to convince the Canadian Government—if it requires convincing, which we hope is not the case—that it would be a most unpatriotic and short-sighted policy on the part of Canada if she did anything unfair to British authors and prejudicial to the interests of Imperial Copyright—which is no mere empty expression or sentiment, but a grand fact, and not one of our least important British possessions. As will be seen from the following letter, Canadian authors are, we are delighted to find, unanimous in defence of Imperial Copyright; they know, of course, that if Canada is excluded from the full and free enjoyment of the rights given by Great Britain to authors, they will be heavy sufferers, for, as we pointed out some time ago, nothing would cripple the literary genius of Canada more than her exclusion from the benefits of Imperial Copyright.

CANADIAN AUTHORS' PROTEST.

The following letter has been addressed by Prof. Pelham Edgar, as Secretary of the Canadian Society of Authors, to the Dominion Ministers on the subject of Copyright:—

'I beg respectfully to submit the following statements on the question of Copyright. I speak as representing the opinion of the Canadian Society of Authors:—

'(1) We endorse any action which the Canadian Government may take towards securing increased legislative privileges in this as in all questions where doubt as to the extent of Canada's prerogative exists.

'(2) While affirming this position we would deprecate any retrogressive legislation which would impair the privileges Canada at present enjoys as a part of the British Empire.

'(3) We would as strongly register our protest against any action being taken that would involve our withdrawal from the Berne Convention. This agreement we regard as an enlightened measure, which recognises the principle of reciprocal international concessions, and accords to the author the right to control the products of his own brain.

'(4) Any licensing clause upon the lines proposed by the Board of Trade of Toronto would necessitate our withdrawal from the Berne Convention.

'(5) Canada would then be isolated in the civilised world, a system of retaliation would be substituted for a system of international reciprocity, and Canadian authorship would be seriously hampered in its growth.

'The Federal Executive, by maintaining existing conditions, can, on the other hand, encourage the development of a Canadian national literature.

'(6) The foremost publishers in Canada are opposed to the introduction of such a licensing clause. The publishers in question—Geo. N. Morang & Co., Limited, the Copp, Clark Co., Limited, and Wm. Briggs, of the Methodist Book and Publishing House—brought out forty-nine British and American copyright works last year, as against two published by the firms now agitating for a change.

'(7) We humbly submit that the views of the united body of Canadian authors have more intimate bearing upon copyright than the views of a section of Canadian printers.'

CONFERENCE OF CANADIAN BOARDS OF TRADE.

In the meantime we await with interest a report of the proceedings at the Conference of Canadian Boards of Trade, held on June 4 and 5, at which the question of Copyright was to be dealt with.

Not long ago the Toronto Board of Trade framed a report on Copyright which was presented to the Government at a meeting at which representatives of several other Boards of Trade were present, at the invitation of the Toronto Board. The following are extracts from this report:—

'6. We would respectfully urge upon the Government that, as in the case of patents, so in Copyright, manufacture in Canada shall be essential. We would therefore suggest that, in the event of the owner of a copyright failing to take out copyright in Canada within thirty days after its original publication in the country of origin, then a license shall be granted by the Government to a Canadian publisher, subject to such safeguards as will secure to the owner of such book a reasonable royalty upon his work.'

'9. Your Committee, in considering these questions, realise that the existing state of affairs is satisfactory to the English and United States publisher and to some of our Canadian publishers, while your Committee regard the defects just referred to as highly unsatisfactory to the manufacturing interests of Canada. Existing Acts fall far short of realising our rights under the British North America Act, for which Sir John Thompson, Sir James Edgar, and the Hon. David Mills so long contended. Under existing arrangements, at any time an understanding or agreement may be arrived at between English authors or publishers and American publishers not to have their books printed in Canada, which would prove disastrous to important industries in Canada. Indeed, at the present moment English authors in many cases include Canada in an arrangement with their American publishers. On this point the Hon. David Mills says: "That is a very unsatisfactory condition of things, and one against which I think Canadians will continue to protest."

It will be seen what the movers in this matter upon the Toronto Board of Trade desire.

Since the above was in type we learn that at the Conference of the Canadian Boards of Trade on June 4 a cable from Mr. John Murray and Mr. Frederick Macmillan was communicated to the meeting, giving their views, and doubtless this had considerable effect. At any rate, when the original and anti-British author resolution was called a member of the Toronto Board who had it in charge withdrew it and substituted the following harmless resolution:

'That this Conference respectfully but strongly urges the Premier of this Dominion and his colleagues to take up with the law officers of the Crown in England the right of Canada to make its own laws on the subject of copyright, without which its rights as a self-governing colony are incomplete.'

Several strong speeches were also made by prominent men against the action of the Toronto Board of Trade.

We think that Mr. Morang and Mr. Walter Barwick, K.C., deserve hearty thanks for their action in this important matter.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

As we go to press (much earlier in the week than usual) the sad announcement of the King's illness, necessitating the postponement of the Coronation, is made. It is, indeed, 'the unexpected which happens'—but surely in all our history it never happened at a more inopportune moment. All we can do is to hope that his Most Gracious Majesty will make a rapid recovery; it is characteristic of his kindly nature that he should desire no postponement of the festivities and rejoicings which are in preparation all over the world.

The July number of Macmillan's Magazine contains an article on 'Fox-hunting in the Lake Country,' by Mr. A. G. Bradley, author of 'North Wales' and 'The Lake District' in the 'Highways and Byways' series. Mr. David Hannay contributes a paper on Sir William Napier, the great military historian; Mr. H. L. Havell gives an account of personal experiences in the West Indies in 'The Soufrière of St. Vincent'; Mr. William Greswell discusses the problems affecting 'Education in South Africa,' and Mr. H. S. Clapham writes on 'The Influence of Puritanism on American Literature.' Fiction is represented by an instalment of the new serial, 'The Cardinal's Pawn,' and by a complete story, in an Indian setting, entitled 'The Adventure of Ignatius Ram Lal.'

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Mr. Alfred Bowker's record of 'The King Alfred Millenary.'

The Emperor of Russia has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Mr. John Foster Fraser's book, 'The Real Siberia.'

From the report of the flourishing Kilburn Public Library we see that Mr. James A. Seymour, the librarian, says:

'The chief cause of the total number of volumes purchased being fewer than last year is the introduction by the publishers of the net price system, whereby the bookseller is precluded from giving discount on net books; thereby considerably increasing the amount expended and diminishing the number of volumes purchasable.'

We are glad to see his experiment of bringing the children of the local schools in touch with the advantages of the library by the loan of juvenile books has been quite successful. There was no loss or damage to the books, and Mr. J. Mellor, the head master of the Salusbury Road Board School, says:

'I have to report that the experiment seems to be most successful and worthy of extension. I have conferred with the class teachers on the subject, and they agree with me that the innovation is very good. There is great competition to secure the loan of a book, notably so for certain books; these evidently had been read and spoken of, thus creating a desire among the others to read them too.' With a much larger stock of juvenile books the scheme could be continued and augmented to far greater advantage.

Early in the spring Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. announced for publication the 'Life' of Dr. Barnardo; but by special arrangement with the Doctor the publication of the book is postponed until the autumn of 1903.

All who are interested in the promotion of friendly relations between our country and Russia—and we hope everybody is—will be glad to know that the 'Anglo-Russian Literary Society' continues to flourish under the Presidency of Mr. Edward A. Cazalet, who in the current number (No. 32) of the Quarterly 'Proceedings' of the Society gives an interesting account of his travels in Asia Minor with his friend the great General Gordon. A paper read by Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S., before the Society is also given in this number, with other items of interest. The headquarters of the Society are at the Imperial Institute.

That the awakening spirit in Ireland which has led to the 'Irish Revival in Literature,' of which we have lately heard so much, is not confined thereto, but at least equally animates those interested in her commerce, agriculture, and education, will be abundantly made evident by a forthcoming work of great interest, to be published for the new Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland by Messrs. Browne & Nolan, Limited, of Dublin. It will be an authoritative exposition of the present condition, resources, and economic possibilities of the country, and is stated to be the most important work of the kind compiled for the past fifty years. The work is edited by Mr. William P. Coyne, M.A., F.S.S., and is entitled, 'Ireland: Industrial and Agricultural.'

One of the best of the Coronation numbers is that of the Field with a finely printed supplement from photographs, specially taken by permission of the King, showing his Majesty's interest in field sports and farming. It is the best number of the Field ever published.

In response to many suggestions made by subscribers to the new serial issue of the Illustrated Edition of Green's 'Short History of the English People,' Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have decided that in future the parts shall appear fortnightly instead of monthly.

'Morang's Annual Register of Canadian Affairs' is the title of a new annual, the object of which is to describe the development of Canadian interests and to supply a yearly historical record of Canadian affairs. Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are the English publishers. The section dealing with education will probably be useful to English publishers, as it covers every province in the Dominion.

'One publisher amuses us with the information that a certain novel of only restricted English interest is on the Index Expurgatorius, whereas every Roman Catholic knows full well that only books of international importance are placed on the Index, and no English novel is likely to get there. Another publisher sends out a paragraph to the press containing some far too personal information about his author. And yet another publisher, who has a house in both London and New York, issued a notice recently to the effect that one of his novels was written by "the most beautiful woman in England." He issued a similar paragraph in New York, but there he explained that the book was written by "the most beautiful woman in America."—Bookfinder.

All interested in old bindings should see Catalogue No. 126, of Messrs. Pickering & Chatto, 66 Haymarket, London, with its many excellent reproductions of old bindings, including one in gold and colour.

Messrs. Sherratt & Hughes, of Manchester, have published a pamphlet entitled 'The Case for the Establishment of Independent Universities of Manchester, Liverpool, and Yorkshire.'

'Among the aids to the study of the Japanese written language, Chamberlain's "Practical Introduction to the Study of Japanese Writing" is an important and very practically planned work, and his "Things Japanese" is an excellent and accurate reference book for historical and other Japanese questions.—Jahresberichten der Geschichtswissenschaft, iii. 295. (Berlin.)

Messrs. A. & F. Denny, of 147 Strand, London, send us a well-printed list of sixpenny editions. In forwarding this they say: 'We might mention that it contains the titles of over 500 novels published within the last few years. An interesting experiment during the season will be the issuing of sixpenny editions of works of a heavier character. Whether the public will support these sufficiently is an open question, but judging by the sale of "Huxley's Lectures and Essays" and "Cobden's Life," their success seems assured.

Temple Bar for July contains 'The Stone of Destiny,' a résumé of the history and traditions of the Coronation Stone, by Miss Goodrich-Freer; an account of the 'Popular Universities in France,' by H. Mackenzie; 'A Jungle Fire and Wild Bees,' and 'Maori Bunangas,' descriptive of certain characteristics and aspects of India and New Zealand respectively; 'A Revolt' against hyper-aestheticism; and a study of Browning's 'Luria.' There are five complete stories, including 'A Weed of Lethe,' by Mrs. Antrobus, and 'The Prodigal Father,' by Miss Cornelia Sorabji, and two serials—the continuation of Miss Broughton's 'Lavinia,' and the opening chapters of 'The Longest Pleasure.'

The volume on 'Prague' written by Count Lutzow will be added almost immediately to Messrs. Dent's 'Medieval Towns' series. In the first chapter of the book the author gives the story of the capital town of his country, than which 'few cities in the world have a more striking and feverish historical record'; and then proceeds to deal with the palaces, churches, monasteries, and the Bohemian museum, concluding with a chapter devoted to walks in Prague and other matter for the tourist. The volume will be illustrated with drawings by Miss Nelly Erichsen and with reproductions from paintings, engravings, &c.

'I've got a new scheme,' said the chief of the brigands. 'Let's have it,' demanded his low-browed lieutenant. 'We'll just capture a bunch of missionaries, hold 'em for a while, and then let them go on condition that we get fifty per cent. of the receipts from their lectures.'—The Philadelphia Press.

Browning's 'Sordello,' prepared by Mr. Buxton Forman, is a new volume of the 'Temple Classics.' The text is from the poet's own final revision, which is being used by special arrangement with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. as controlling the copyright in the numerous changes made when the poem was republished in 1863 and later. The editorial additions to this somewhat obscure poem should not be out of place. A photogravure portrait opens the volume.

The University Tutorial Press, Ltd., announces for September new editions of 'The Matriculation Chemistry,' by G. H. Bailey, D.Sc. Lond., Ph.D. Heidelberg. It will be issued under the title of 'The New Matriculation Chemistry,' and will contain the Matriculation Supplements on Metals and their Compounds and the Chemistry of Daily Life. Also a new edition of the 'Tutorial Algebra, Elementary Course,' by Rupert Deakin, M.A., with modifications fitting it to the requirements of the new London Matriculation Syllabus, and will contain a special chapter on Graphs. This book will be issued early in September.

'Imperialism, Federation, and Policy' is the title of yet another work on the subject of the day. It is by Mr. H. M. Butler-Johnstone, and deals with the question of political and commercial federation, and with the Eastern question and the prospects and policy of the reforming party in Turkey. It will be published on the 24th inst. by Mr. George Allen.

A review of 'The Royal Academy Exhibition,' by Mr. Frank Rinder, will occupy the greater part of the Art Journal for July; there will be also an article on the New Gallery Exhibition. Two plate reproductions after exhibited pictures by Mr. MacWhirter, R.A., and Mr. Sargent, R.A., will be given, as well as a number of smaller illustrations. Mr. Walter Crane will contribute the first article of a series on the first International Exhibition of 'Decorative Art at Turin.'

The House, the Journal of Home Arts and Crafts, for July will have a double presentation supplement giving a full-sized working drawing for a carved and inlaid shelf. Among the subjects of the articles are: 'Former Coronation Feasts,' 'The Home Arts and Industries Exhibition,' 'Some Interesting Old Furniture,' 'The Art of Dyeing and Staining Leather,' 'Inlaid Panels and Fretted and Embossed Metal Work.'

It is interesting to note that the Rev. Lauchlan MacLean Watt, who is announced as the winner of the first prize in the Good Words Coronation Odes Competition, was the author of a little volume of poems in a very different vein, entitled 'In Love's Garden,' which Messrs. Dent published quite recently.

A QUESTION OF LITERARY ETHICS.

M. Hugues le Roux, the French journalist and lecturer, has confided to an audience of students at the University of Chicago that he was the author of 'La Belle Nivernaise,' one of the best-known short stories printed over the name of Alphonse Daudet. He said, in effect:

'While I was M. Daudet's secretary I faithfully studied his style, as did also many of his other young pupils. You know that we have in the Louvre many paintings by Rubens. These all bear the name of the master, and yet it is a well-known fact that many of them are the work of his pupils, who closely imitated him, offering their results to him from time to time for correction and advice and final revision, but doing practically all the labour themselves. One day my master came to me and said: "Le Roux, an American magazine for young people wishes me to produce for them a very moral story which shall have for its central figures such and such young persons of estimable character. Have you in stock such personages, and can you produce such a story?" I told my master that I would try, and the result was "La Belle Nivernaise."

M. le Roux's statement raises an interesting question in literary ethics, namely: Is it ever legitimate for an author to sign his name to another writer's work? The New York Times answers the question with some asperity. It says:

'Whether Daudet would or would not have been guilty of such a contemptible transaction as that with which M. le Roux charges him—it amounts to nothing less than obtaining money under false pretences—must, of course, be left for decision to those who knew the man as well as his books, and even his nearest friends cannot determine the matter absolutely, since the task imposed upon them, if they would refute the accusation, is the impossible one of proving a negative.'

HEINRICH HEINE.

A portion of the unpublished writings of Heinrich Heine is just now offered for sale from Paris. 'It seems incredible,' remarks the National Zeitung, 'that, spite of the exhaustive researches of German literary men and collectors, who have diligently sought during many years for every scrap written by Heine—who, as is well known, died in 1856 at Paris—a portion of his writings has still remained hidden. It is notorious that, after the poet's death, owing to the ignorant negligence of his wife and of her not always disinterested advisers, a great part of the papers left by the poet, among them the larger portion of his memoirs and correspondence, numerous unpublished manuscript poems, &c., were mislaid; and although it is true that a great quantity of material, consisting of poems by Heine and letters from and to him, has been turned to biographical use in well known posthumous publications by German inquirers, by members of the Heine family, and by literary friends, yet it was perceived that there were numerous gaps in all these publications. As we are now informed by our correspondent in Paris, the papers of Heinrich Heine which have now turned up are probably the entire residue of the papers that have remained in Paris since Heine's death. Certainly the price asked for them—30,000 francs—seems absurd. No list of these papers is given, nor have the channels and bookselling media through which they are to be offered for sale as yet been made known. We are advised, however, that there are substantially about 300 letters to Heine from prominent literary persons, also a series of manuscripts poetry and prose, numbering about 250, of which some thirty have not been published. Lastly, in addition to these literary relics are some of Heine's personal effects, such as his inkstand, writing case, &c.—Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel.

This is a good book, with a happily chosen title. What reader of 'Springhaven,'† that delightful romance by R. D. Blackmore, would not like to have been a friend of Nelson, 'Flapin,' as Nelson's charming goddaughter, Miss Dolly Darling, called 'My Lord Admiral,' of whom Mr. Blackmore truly wrote: 'The nature of Flapin was to make his enemies run away, but his friends keep very near to him'?

In his Preface to this true tale Mr. Hutchinson tells his readers that 'at least the greater part of the events here recorded has not been told before.' Indeed, we suppose not many present-day readers have heard of Bonaparte's idea to compass the death of 'that man of noble type,' as Mr. Blackmore termed him, 'whom the English Government, according to its lights—which appear to be everlasting—regarded as the right man, when wanted, but at other times the wrong one.' The story opens excellently with a vivid recital of the part taken by the 'Monarch,' on which the youthful hero serves as master's mate, in the destruction of the Danish fleet by Admirals Sir Hyde Parker and Lord Nelson on April 2, 1801. Severely wounded while crossing the 'Monarch's' deck to speak to Col. Hutchinson, of the Forty-ninth, intended for the assault on the Trekroner battery, and refusing to be carried below, where he knows the surgeons are busy, the young master's mate is lying against a bulkhead when he sees the Colonel rise up from the deck on which he has been seated and expose the rear of his inexpressibles covered with blood and dirt. So amused is he at the sight of the new uniform breeches of the smartest of smart Colonels in such a plight that he bursts out laughing. Instead of expressing annoyance, the Colonel joins in the laugh, and praises him for a plucky fellow who can laugh when so badly wounded, and he remains by the young fellow's side until the action is over and afterwards recommends him to the notice of Lord Nelson, whose response to the Colonel's letter is given in facsimile in the book. The master's mate is made junior lieutenant, and afterwards through Lord Nelson's interest is given the command of a dispatch cutter. He takes as boatsman Reuben Elphick, a villager of Withyham in Sussex, the Lieutenant's native place. Reuben, who had been A.B. on Nelson's own ship, the 'Elephant,' at Copenhagen, has a fatal weakness for grog. Lord Nelson intrusts the Lieutenant with important dispatches for the Government, which Henri de Marigny, a Bonapartist spy, steals from him while asleep and confiding in the vigilance of Reuben, whom the spy primes with drink. The Lieutenant falls into temporary disgrace with his superiors, but goes to Brighton, where he gains the good will of the Prince Regent and gets a ship, which he fights at Trafalgar. Society and Court life at Brighton are faithfully and picturesquely described, and this portion of the book is full of interest, while the hero's love affair with the beautiful Countess d'Estourville lends additional charm to a dramatic and well-told story, of which one of the most striking incidents is the frustrated attempt on the life of Nelson.

CORONATION BOOK.

CROWNED TO SERVE: a Coronation Welcome to our King and Queen, by Charles Bullock, B.D., with Portraits and Illustrations. London: Home Words Publishing Office.

This is an acceptable book at the present time when every one wishes to know as much as possible about the lives of our beloved King and Queen and about the order and significance of the time-honoured Service used at the Coronation of their Majesties. The veteran author has fully achieved the object he had at heart in writing it; which was, as he tells us in his Preface, 'not merely to give a consecutive biography of our King and Queen, though we think we have given a comprehensive record of main incidents; but rather to illustrate, from a general standpoint, the leading features and characteristics of Royal life in England as they express and commend to us the Royalty of 'Service.' Eight sections are comprised in the volume, and are thus headed:—The Coronation; Coronation Hymns and Songs; Our King and Queen; Royal Incidents and Anecdotes; Another Royal Home (Prince of Wales's Household); Our Mother Queen (Home Life of Queen Victoria); Crown Jewels (Departed Children of Queen Victoria); The Nation Crowned. The book is handsomely printed and bound, and contains about sixty beautiful illustrations, consisting of portraits of the Royal Family, pictures of places and events and of pet animals. Admirably suited for presentation.

BOOKSELLERS'

PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The usual monthly meeting of the Directors was held at the Sunday School Union, 56 Old Bailey, on Thursday, June 19. Mr. C. J. Longman presided and the following Directors were present: Messrs. Archer (W. H. Smith & Son), Ashley (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), Bartram (Longmans), Blade (Simpkins), Brownjohn, Cooper (W. & R. Chambers), Harden (Rivingtons), Johnson (Reeves & Turner), Reynolds (Simpkins), Spon (E. & F. N. Spon), Wilkinson (E. Stanford), Wilson and Woodford (Simpkins).

After the minutes of the last meeting had been read and confirmed the sum of £96 17s. 8d. was, upon the recommendation of the Relief Committee, voted for the temporary and permanent assistance of fifty-six members and widows of members.

'COME BUY, COME BUY!'

THE MODERN PUBLISHER'S FRANTIC EFFORTS TO DISPOSE OF HIS GOODS.

Among a number of extremely dispiriting prophecies having to do with the condition of society several centuries hence, Mr. H. G. Wells once conceived the idea of shouting machines which should be used as advertising mediums, and hail one on the street corners with the stentorian demand, 'Have you read Bigsby's new novel?' or something of the kind. It begins to look as if Mr. Wells might be numbered among the predictive authors, who, like M. Jules Verne, live to see their prognostications come true. It cannot be more than a step from present methods of book advertising to shouting machines, or worse.

A decade ago there were three or four stock phrases, one or all of which were to be found tacked on to the announcements of every publisher who made any claim to keeping abreast with the times. In those good and simple days the only claim made for every novel published was that, once taken up, it would not be laid down until the last page was turned, or that there was not a dull line in it from start to finish, or that it held the reader from cover to cover.

Then someone invented the phrase 'the novel of the year,' since which time there have been, annually, so many 'novels of the year' that one grows quite dizzy trying to remember their names. And now we are on the verge of giving away a beautiful celluloid paper knife or a cake of soap with every copy.

As these lines are written, two books are upon the market, each of which contains a detachable coupon. On one of these the delighted reader is supposed to send his guess as to the authorship of the twelve stories contained in the book. On the second he is supposed to express his opinion as to the relative good looks of the heroine, who is presented by a dozen more or less prominent illustrators in as many different guises. These portraits of what is described as 'the most beautiful woman in Europe' are all grouped together at the beginning of the book, and it is worthy of note that at least half of them represent about as plain featured a female as one would be apt to meet in a day's journey. Once we were invited to guess the weight of the prize pig at a country fair, with the pig as reward if we succeeded. We did not get the pig, and the disappointment so discouraged us that we shall not even try this new contest. But, O Literature, how beautiful are all thy ways!

Better than either of these was the case of a book which came to the critic's hands with a publisher's announcement inclosed, wherein was set forth the fact that the author was a deserving young man who had undertaken the work in question in order to support his aged parents. This, it seems, so touched the publishers that they accepted the manuscript. 'Pease, mister, buy me poipers. Me little brudder's in de horspittle!'

Letters to the Editor

COST OF A SMALL FREE LIBRARY

DEAR SIR,—We are in want of some information which we do not know quite where to obtain, and so we venture to appeal to you to know if you can kindly assist us. A valued client of ours is thinking of presenting a free library to the town and also of endowing it so that it may not come on the rates, and what we want to find out is what the probable cost of the necessary books to start it would be (we are only a small place of 7,000 inhabitants), what amount should be provided each year to purchase fresh books, the amount of the librarian's salary, and if a room about 36 feet square would be large enough. We shall be very grateful if you can help us in this matter. We enclose a stamped envelope for a reply, but if you prefer to reply through the columns of your valued paper kindly do not publish our name and address, as the scheme may not come off. Thanking you in anticipation,

Your faithfully,

BOOKSELLERS.

[Knowing that Mr. Thos. Johnston, chief librarian and secretary, Hornsey Public Libraries, has great experience in the matter, we asked him if he would kindly reply to the letter of our correspondents, who are West of England booksellers, and he has been good enough to do so as follows. We think the information will be interesting and useful, as in our opinion all these libraries ought to be supplied through the local booksellers.—ED. P.C.]

DEAR SIR,—In reply to the letter of your correspondent, a public library for a town of 7,000 inhabitants, to be really useful, should be started with not less than 5,000 volumes, and the cost of these would be about £650; but if a good proportion of the standard works in history, travel, and biography were bought secondhand or as remainders, and the new books purchased subject to the usual library discount, then the cost would be reduced to about £550.

The proportion of volumes in each class should be:

Science...	300
Useful Arts ...	250
Fine and Recreative Arts ...	250
Social Science...	150
Philosophy and Religion ...	200
History and Travel ...	700
Biography ...	600
Language and Literature ...	150
Poetry and the Drama ...	200
Prose Fiction ...	1,700
Juvenile Fiction ...	300
Miscellaneous Literature ...	100
Reference Works ...	100
	<hr/> 5,000

If the only available place for this library is one room 36 feet square, and it is intended to establish a lending library and reading room, it could be divided by a partition into two of 36 feet by 18 feet each, one being used as the lending library and the other as the reading room; but while these may be sufficient for present needs, there would be no room for future extension.

The cost of furnishing the library with bookcases, tables, reading stands, chairs, card charging system of issuing, and other incidental appliances necessary for the equipment of a new library, would be about £400.

The librarian appointed should be a person with training in a public library, and the commencing salary in a provincial town should not be less than £100 per annum, or £80 with residence, gas, fuel, &c., rising by annual increments to, say, £150 to £200, and he should be provided with at least one assistant at the commencement.

Newspapers and Periodicals ...	25	0	0
Binding ...	15	0	0
Printing and Stationery ...	10	0	0
Cleaning and Materials ...	25	0	0
Heating, Gas, Insurance, &c. ...	35	0	0
Salary of Librarian ...	100	0	0

The above items are the lowest which I think should be set aside each year in order to keep the library in a progressive state, and they may be increased as funds are available.

No sum is set aside for the printing of catalogues, as with the aid of local advertisements the catalogue may be made self-supporting.

If it is desired to erect a new building for the library, a site should be selected which is central and easy of access from all parts of the town, fronting a main street if possible, and provide for future extension.

The building may cost between £2,000 and £5,000, according to the design of the structure and the local price of building material and labour.

Should your correspondent require any further information I shall be happy to supply it to the best of my ability.

Yours faithfully,

THOS. JOHNSTON.

NATIONAL BOOK TRADE PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—The effusive diatribe with which Mr. Haldane has favoured us in your current issue, reminds me of the proverbial legal axiom—'If you haven't a good case, damn your opponents.'

Kindly spare me space in which I may touch, briefly, on his letter in sequence.

I received with pleasure the information from Mr. Brabrook that he had secured the assistance of your correspondent to canvass Edinboro' with a list specially provided for the signatures of any one favourable to the proposal, at the same time I greatly wondered at the negative result. Now I thank Mr. Haldane for his ingenuous explanation. I no longer wonder when he tells us that his candidature was 'accompanied with an expression of his own views.' 'Opinions' certainly differ, and very widely, as is shown by experience. Truly 'the kisses of an enemy are deceitful'; better far an open enemy than a false friend.

I have before me printed evidence that his 'canny Scot' found a way, 'lang syne,' to produce even a better scheme than we can ever hope to put forth.

It is at least consolatory that he can find a word of praise, and can cordially approve of our choice of a chairman, though he is an employer, and a large one too! Herein we acted on a motto of Seneca's, 'Elige eum, cujus tibi placuit et vita et oratio.' I fail to see the relevancy of the concluding part of his fourth paragraph.

Mr. Haldane's innuendo against Mr. Brabrook is as unjust as it is uncalled for.

In his next (sixth) paragraph he is inconsistent. If the proposed society should come into operation it will have a cohesive effect by a natural process—particularly in large towns. Mr. Haldane would put on a roof before laying a foundation to carry it. If, as he says, 'most of them (assistants) are no doubt saving a little,' whence the need of any 'association to find out what they really want'?

I cannot but feel sorry for the scope of your correspondent's judgment as to what constitutes an 'assistant.' I would refer him to a dictionary. If I am not an assistant (and my colleagues also) I should be very glad if he will define what my occupation is.

In his final paragraph Mr. Haldane concludes his criticism with the dictum that 'In the first place, an Association of Assistants should consist of assistants, and not, as in the present instance, principally of employers.' Let me answer this with a coin for him to nail on his mental counter; that (1) the idea, and the expression of the idea, first came from assistants, and most certainly not from any employer; (2) that the inaugural meeting was attended by 24 persons (mostly delegates), two only of whom were employers (Abel Heywood, Esq., and Mr. A. Chrystal), and the remainder (22) bona fide assistants. This is just 'where they do come in,' Mr. Haldane. Out of that number ten names were mentioned to form a sub-committee; seven were called to a preliminary meeting, at which one employer and six assistants were present. His suggestion that 'employers were being invited to join with some ulterior object' and the remainder of his comments constitute a gross libel.

Now if Mr. Haldane has any good arguments to put forth 'pro' or 'con,' we shall all be glad if he will follow Mark Twain's advice and 'trot them out.' I will promise him they shall receive due attention. If he hasn't anything better to offer than his present contribution, I would say that 'Silence is golden.'

Sir, it is really painful to see the powerful talent of a really worthy, though misguided member of our trade perverted to an attack so superficially splenetic, but after what I have now said, I will leave it with confidence to be judged by all whom it concerns at its face value.

My time is too valuable to confute any more baseless assertions and unfounded statements.

Yours faithfully,

HENRY M. CATER.

Manchester, June 21, 1902.

DANGERS IN ELECTRIC LAMPS.

There is a common belief that electric incandescent lamps give out very little heat, and that, therefore, fire danger from them is practically non-existent.

Hence it is that such lamps are frequently found disposed of with much unconscious carelessness in the neighbourhood of combustible materials—in store windows, for example, for decorative effect—and the wonder is that fire losses from such use of the lamps are not more widespread.

In one case where a lighted lamp rested against a vertically placed white pine board a spot about an inch in diameter, and of a light brown colour, appeared after about every four hours.

In the case of a similarly disposed strip of well-seasoned varnished oak, the varnish became blistered in three minutes and blackened in about fifteen. The wood had the appearance of being charred at and near the point of contact with the lamp, but was not ignited.

With a lamp encased in two thicknesses of muslin, the latter became scorched in one minute, in three minutes gave out smoke, and at the end of six minutes, when the muslin cover was removed from the lamp and fresh air reached its interior, it burst into flames.

Where a lamp was laid on inflammable material the effect seemed to be more rapid, due probably to the pressure exerted by the weight of the lamp. A newspaper was, in this way, carbonised in three minutes and ignited in forty-five. The lamps used were of sixteen-candle power.

In one instance it was found that on immersing a sixteen-candle power lamp in half a pint of water, the latter boiled within an hour. Again, with a lamp buried in cotton wool, the wool soon began to scorch and ultimately burst into flame. A lamp in contact with celluloid fired it in less than five minutes.—The Department Store Review.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. S. V. Galloway, in consequence of impending rebuilding of 18 King's Parade, Cambridge, removes on July 1 to larger and more convenient premises at 30 Sidney Street. In making this move he is taking into partnership Mr. Charles P. Porter, and from that date the style of the firm will be Galloway & Porter, New and Secondhand Booksellers, Publishers, and Stationers.

DATES ON WATER-MARKS.

The following letter from the Times is of much interest to the paper trade:—'Sir, I should be glad to say a few words upon a subject of some importance to archivists and men of letters who may hereafter have to deal with the dates of documents, more especially private correspondence. I refer to the almost universal omission by paper-makers of the date of the manufacture of their paper, which used to be recorded by the water-mark.

'Everyone who has had occasion to determine the date of a letter left undated by the writer, and where the postmark was absent or illegible, must have felt under deep obligation to the paper-maker, by the aid of whose water-mark it could in most cases be approximately ascertained. It is to be feared that the inquirers of the future will frequently find themselves in difficulty; especially as in former days the postmark was impressed upon the letter itself, while it is now stamped upon an envelope which may easily be lost or thrown away.

'Nothing could be easier than to revert to the old practice, and such a step would earn for the manufacturers the gratitude of all concerned in historical or literary research.

'The great importance which a dated water-mark may possess in legal proceedings is strikingly illustrated by a passage in the interesting letters of C  ar de Saussure on England in the time of the first Georges, recently published by Mr. Murray. A dishonest steward endeavoured, by means of forged documents, to make his mistress, the Duchess of Buckingham, responsible for the repayment of large sums which had in fact never been advanced to her.

'A lengthy lawsuit followed, which came before the Court of King's Bench, and the Duchess, who had already been condemned to lose the lawsuit by the Judges of the Court below, was going to be condemned by those of the higher Court, when one of them had a sudden inspiration. Seizing a contested bill, the Judge held it up to the light, and, having examined it carefully, he discovered to a certainty that the bill was forged, the date and water-mark on the paper being several years posterior to the date of the writing.'—I remain, Sir, very truly yours, RICHARD GARNETT.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Alexander & Shephard, Limited.—'The Life and Ministry of the Rev. Caleb Morris.' By the Rev. D. Tyssil Evans, M.A., B.Sc., Lecturer in Hebrew at the University College of South Wales. Mr. Tyssil Evans undertook to write a biography of Caleb Morris as a matter of duty, because the older people of Whitechurch, his native place, lamented that none existed. Written in Welsh, it was cordially received in the Principality. Being urged to issue an English edition, the author at first hesitated, for he wanted to complete some work begun years ago, but at last yielded to the request. In this translation things of interest to Welsh readers only are omitted; the chief difference, however, lies in the additions made. Mr. Evans says: 'I have sought to place Caleb Morris before the reader as he was, and have been especially anxious to present a picture of his inner life which is so vividly portrayed in his diaries.' That he has succeeded is evident from the fact that the reader is strangely drawn towards this remarkable man, whose disposition was so generous and open, intellect so acute, love of learning and of religion alike intense, and who was endowed with so handsome a face and figure. The portraits embellishing the volume show what a handsome man he must have been, and the extracts from his sermons, diaries, and correspondence, together with the many anecdotes related of him, testify to his eloquence and earnestness as a preacher, and to his amiability and generosity as a man. Caleb Morris was born at Park-yd (Corn-field) Farm, high up on the mountain slope of Voeldrigarn (the hill with the three carns, or, as some say, with the three ramparts), and received a good education, first at Cardigan and then at Haverfordwest Grammar Schools, from whence he proceeded to the Presbyterian College at Carmarthen, and was ordained on April 2, 1823, minister at Narbeth, a 'duoglot' town on the edge of the Pembrokeshire coal-field. In 1827 he received a call to Fetter Lane Chapel, London, where he remained until the precarious state of his health obliged him in November 1849 to resign his pastorate, to the great regret of the congregation; and in 1856 he retired to the Principality, where he passed the remaining years of a useful life, dying July 26, 1865. Mr. Evans has written a most interesting book, not confined to the life and work of Caleb Morris, but also describing the romantic mountainous region where he was born, and the manners and habits of its inhabitants. The third chapter gives a brief but graphic history of religion in the Principality from the Reformation to the beginning of the nineteenth century. This chapter will come as a revelation to many readers, and is a serious indictment of the ecclesiastical authorities in Wales during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. After reading it one better understands why Dissenters are so numerous in the Principality and is only surprised to learn that such self-denying clergymen and promoters of religion and education in the eighteenth century as Griffith Jones and Howell Davies should have died in communion with a Church so harsh and ungrateful. The book is written with the greatest charity and impartiality, and with a mastery of English more often found nowadays in those who, like Mr. Evans, have learnt English as a foreign language than in the average Englishman.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Summer Playground,' by Charles Spencer Hayward, B.A. There is a manly invigorating tone about this volume in 'The Young England Library' that is certain to enlist the sympathies of all school boys. The author appeals to them in earnest unaffected language, and whether treating of cricket, lawn tennis, golf, croquet, and other games is always impressive and interesting. The sections on batting, it should be noticed, are written by Mr. R. S. Nicholson, and contain much excellent advice in regard to the position of the body, the method to be observed in 'forward,' 'back,' and offensive play, the attitude in 'driving,' and so forth.

From the same.—“Martello Tower” in China and the Pacific, by Francis Martin Norman, Commander, R.N. As a record of ‘the long, interesting, and eventful commission on the China and Pacific Stations, from 1856 to 1860, of H.M.S. Tribune,’ this book seems to us to be as entertaining as it well could be. Those readers who know ‘Martello Tower’s’ previous work, ‘At School and at Sea,’ will not require to be told that he is at all times a genial and inspiring companion, who has the ability to write with breeziness and humour. We have found the present volume delightful: it is copiously illustrated and tastefully bound.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—‘Sir Theodore’s Guest, and other Stories,’ by Grant Allen. The seven stories in this volume are scarcely written in the late Mr. Grant Allen’s best manner, but they are of sufficient merit to betoken the experienced author. Perhaps the most characteristic is the first, ‘His Last Chance,’ which relates how a thoroughly heartless, unscrupulous Italian came by his death at the hands of a girl whom he had betrayed and mercilessly persecuted. ‘Sir Theodore’s Guest’ shows, after the author’s whimsical fashion, that even an archbishop, despite his dignified appearance and the solemnity of his position, may possess human feeling and be subject to the ordinary temptations that beset other people, and may occasionally break over the traces in a very unexpected manner. The stories, taken as a body, are slight but readable. They form the latest volume in Mr. Arrowsmith’s three-and-sixpenny series.

From Mr. Howard Wilford Bell.—‘The Love Letters of a Portuguese Nun,’ English version by R. H. To this prettily produced edition of the ‘love letters’ Mr. Edmund Gosse has added an interesting bibliography, M. Alexandre Piedagnel supplies some account of the book, and Josephine Lazarus indulges in appropriate ‘reflections.’ But why are these particulars placed at the end of the volume, where they are in danger of being overlooked, since there is nothing on the title-page to denote their existence?

From Messrs. Blackwood & Son.—‘The Watcher by the Threshold, and other Tales,’ by John Buchan. All the five stories in this volume are of a more or less mystical character. The first, ‘No-Man’s-Land,’ describes the holiday trip of an Oxford Professor of ‘Northern Antiquities’ in a little-explored district among the hills of Scotland, and his adventures with Picts or Brownies, who eventually encompass his death; by most people he is regarded as a victim to over-study. ‘The Watcher by the Threshold’ is the story of a man who is devil-possessed, and imagines that he has always a figure at his left hand; the narrative to have been artistic should have ended with the utter collapse of the victim. Instead of this the author displays a humorous vein, and describes how the evil one got out of its original habitation and grappled with a minister, but, being here repulsed, winged its way to far distant regions, leaving its previous victims free. Mr. Buchan’s stories are highly absorbing, and the worst that can be said against them is that they slightly suffer from a lack of variety. People off their mental balance are all very well, but it is possible in one volume to have a little too much of them.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.—‘Social England: a Record of the Progress of the People,’ edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. Oxford, and J. S. Mann, M.A. Oxford. Illustrated Edition. Vol. II. The volume before us comprises a long and important period in the history of social England from the Accession of King Edward I. to the Death of King Henry VII. It contains chapters five to eight of the work. Chapter V. describes the Consolidation of the Kingdom between the years 1274 and 1348; Chapter VI. tells of the Black Death and its consequences from 1348 to 1399; Chapter VII. relates events and changes during the closing years of the Middle Ages, 1399 to 1485; and Chapter VIII. treats of the Beginning of Modern England with the reign of the first of the Tudors, Henry VII., from 1485 to 1509. As may be supposed, the 850 pages of this volume are full of interest. They are written by thoroughly competent contributors, and are beautifully illustrated by upwards of 400 designs in black and white, and nine coloured plates.

From the same.—‘Cassell’s Cyclopædia of Mechanics,’ edited by Paul N. Hasluck. Second Series. This second series contains in a convenient form a store of receipts, processes, and memoranda contributed by skilful and talented technicians and experts, and a copious index of 9,250 items supplies easy means of reference to every separate particular and detail of any kind dealt with in the volume, which is profusely illustrated by figures and diagrams 1,250 in number. An invaluable book for use in the workshop.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—‘Cricket Form at a Glance: showing the Batting and Bowling of every Cricketer who has played in First-Class Matches in any two Seasons between 1878–1902, with every run scored for or against the Australians in England, the Elevens they met, the Results and that of every County Match,’ compiled by Home Gordon, with an Introduction by Lord Hawke. The ardent cricketer will be able in this volume to immerse himself in a mass of statistics that will afford him the greatest pleasure. The attractions of such a work, however, do not alone consist in the figures it gives; quite as much enjoyment is to be derived from the recollections it recalls. Of the character of the book the long title supplies a sufficient explanation. It is only necessary to say that the author has performed the somewhat wearisome task of compilation with infinite industry and zeal, and that in very few instances do we even suspect him of inaccuracies. Lord Hawke’s Introduction is just the manly unaffected piece of work that we might expect from such an enthusiastic supporter of out-door exercises.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—‘The “Temple” Bible—Numbers,’ edited by G. Buchanan Gray, M.A. ‘The Earlier Pauline Epistles: Galatians, Thessalonians I., II.,’ edited by Vernon Bartlet, M.A. The editor of the Book of Numbers considers that title unsuitable, since it covers the subject of only a small part of the book, and thinks ‘In the Wilderness’ would be more appropriate.

He also considers that Numbers contains some of the most significant evidence against the traditional view that the Pentateuch was written by Moses. ‘Most conclusive of all, when understood,’ he says, ‘is the incredibility and impossibility of the various numbers given in the book.’ To our mind it seems still more incredible, considering that neither scribes nor compositors are infallible, how anyone can suppose that mistakes have never crept into the Bible, either in manuscript or in print. Very few figures or so-called facts are indisputable. It has been said that figures and statistics may be made to prove anything. But to whomever may be due the authorship of the Pentateuch, there can be no doubt of the value and helpfulness to Bible students and readers of the mass of information to be found in the editor’s Introduction and notes. This edition also contains an excellent map of Canaan, a list of passages in the works of well-known English writers suggested by incidents in Numbers, a synchronism of ancient history, and a table of Hebrew weights and measures. A frontispiece reproduces George Tinworth’s beautiful panel, ‘The Power of Faith.’ ‘The Earlier Pauline Epistles’ are edited with a like care and knowledge as the Book of Numbers. The frontispiece is a reproduction from Mr. Hollier’s photograph of the well-known painting, ‘Charity,’ by G. F. Watts, R.A. Both volumes are as luxuriously produced as the previous volumes of the ‘Temple’ Bible.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—‘Lord Kelvin, G.C.V.O.,’ by John Munro. The author has gathered into this ‘Double Volume’ of the ‘Bijou Biographies’ many interesting particulars relating to Lord Kelvin’s life, and his work contains a portrait of the eminent scientist.

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co., Piccadilly.—‘The Winchester Walton.’ This is one of the best in many ways of the long list of editions of Walton & Cotton’s ‘Compleat Angler.’ It is edited by a very good angler and enthusiastic admirer of Walton, Mr. George A. B. Dewar, who has been fortunate enough to discover some new and most interesting matter relating to Walton, proving that he held a large farm on the Test in Hampshire, and lending ground to the hope that still further information may be discovered. No one had ever previously to Mr. Dewar’s discovery connected Walton with the Test, though he refers in his work to the clear trout streams of Hampshire. This ‘Winchester’ edition is in two handsome quarto volumes, very well printed and very light to handle, and fully illustrated with text reproductions of the fish in the original work, with clever head-and-tail pieces, and with many full-page photogravures. Some of the latter are good, but of some we can only say that if it be an art to hide nature so that you cannot tell what is water and what is land, or what is anything—then some of these full-page etchings are extraordinarily successful—but it is a big ‘if.’

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—‘The Silver Gate,’ by Clarence Forestier-Walker. If Mr. Walker were a little more careful about his spelling, his punctuation, and his style, he would write a very creditable novel; as it is, however, the outstanding impression one obtains from his work is that it is very slipshod. He has power, and it cannot be denied that he has the root of the matter in him; indeed, parts of his story seemed very good indeed, and quite above the average. His heroine, Evelyn Aubrey, marries an artist, who is very soon reduced to a state of abject poverty; he is taken seriously ill, and the doctor says that nothing but champagne and brandy will cure him. In order to obtain these necessities, Evelyn commits an indiscretion—that is the hardest term that can be used to define her act. It is too late, however. Her husband dies, and years after she marries again. She is then pestered by a blackmailer who has been a witness to her indiscretion of years ago. The blackmailer is satisfactorily disposed of, and all ends happily. As we said before, the novel is a good piece of work spoiled by sheer carelessness.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'A Blessing in Disguise' and 'The Secret of Dunstan Mere,' by Annie Swan. These two volumes of short stories are written in Miss Swan's well-known manner, and whatever may be said against her lukewarm style and her superficiality, it cannot be denied that she has the enviable power to interest. Even her most trivial story has a sense of reality about it, and this in spite of the fact that she rarely gets below the surface of life or character. We must, however, protest once more against the common custom of publishing volumes of stories as one continued tale. The public likes to know what it is buying, and we ourselves have, on more than one occasion, obtained books from the library under the impression that we had secured a novel, only to be disgusted by finding that our work of fiction was a volume of short stories.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Book of Orchids,' by W. H. White, F.R.H.S. ('Handbooks of Practical Gardening,' edited by Harry Roberts, Volume VIII.). The author of this work is well known as an authority on orchids, and for many years he has been professionally engaged in their culture. The opening pages of his work are devoted to a consideration of some general aspects of the subject—imported plants, materials for potting, orchid houses, ventilation, watering, and so forth; and he then enters upon his description of the different varieties of the plant, no less than ninety kinds being mentioned. Throughout his handling of the subject is marked by thorough knowledge. The volume, which is finely illustrated, should be found of great interest and service by all cultivators of orchids both in this country and abroad.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'The Rise of Wellington,' by Earl Roberts, V.C. Sixpenny edition. It is late in the day to speak of the admirable descriptive power, the concise language, and masterly grasp of detail that distinguish this work; but at least we may express satisfaction that it has been found possible to present the reading world with a cheap edition of a book so conducive to a right understanding of one of the most notable Generals who ever led the English forces to victory. This new edition the author appropriately dedicates to the British Army, 'which it is my pride and privilege to command'; and in the same Preface he bears testimony to 'the discipline courage, and endurance of the British soldier, and his uniform humane conduct towards the inhabitants of the country with which we may be fighting.' The printing and paper are of the best, and the cover is one that will at once catch the eye when displayed on a bookstall.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'No. 99' and 'Blue Blood,' by Major Arthur Griffiths. We have frequently in these columns referred to the crude workmanship of present-day sensational fiction, but after all, loose construction or not, there is nothing better adapted to relieve the mind from depressing thoughts and to give tone and vigour to the mental constitution again. Of course a murder is at the bottom of Major Griffiths's story; that almost goes without saying. In No. 99 at the Grand Hotel, Blythesea, a man has been found murdered, and one of the visitors to the establishment, who has been greatly attracted by the good looks and seductive style of a young lady who is staying with her brother-in-law and his wife at the hotel, constitutes himself a species of amateur detective, and runs the criminal to earth with almost surprising dexterity, though he receives more than one check during the course of his pursuit. Readers of sensational fiction will scarcely require to be told that the young lady before mentioned and her relatives are greatly suspected of being concerned in the crime. 'Blue Blood' is much the shorter of the two stories in the volume, and is scarcely so absorbing.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Intermediate French Grammar, with Outlines of Historical Accidence,' by G. H. Clarke, M.A., and L. R. Tanqueray, B.ès-L. This is not only a highly serviceable book in the acquirement of the French language, but it possesses by reason of its bearing on historical accidence an interest somewhat beyond its mere value as an educational manual. The gradual growth and emancipation of French from the old popular Latin spoken in Gaul, which differed from classical Latin in vocabulary, pronunciation, accidence, and syntax, forms in itself an exceedingly engrossing subject to those who are concerned with the study of languages. Messrs. Clarke and Tanqueray have divided their volume into eleven chapters, and in these they respectively treat of the alphabet, the articles, nouns, adjectives, numerals, pronouns and pronominal adjectives, the verbs, adverbs, conjunctions, prepositions, and interjections of the French language. The book is both clearly written and well arranged, and the student should in no case have any difficulty in following the line of instruction. A more thorough, carefully prepared work we have not met for some time.

From Messrs. Otto, Limited.—'The Connoisseur: a Magazine for Collectors.' The June number of this periodical well sustains the reputation it has acquired by previous issues. The contents are not only extremely interesting, but varied in their character. Among the articles the most noticeable are 'The Collection of Mr. Alfred de Rothschild at Seamount Place,' by Mrs. Steuart Erskine; 'On Portrait Medals or Plaques in Silver by Simon de Passe and Michel le Blond,' by Alfred E. Copp; 'Jean Baptiste Vuillaume and his Violins,' by Geoffrey de Holden Stone; 'Mr. Julian Marshall's Book Plates,' 'George Stubbs, R.A., 1725-1802,' by B. Kendall; and 'Palimpsest Copper Plates,' by George Somes Layard. Each of these papers is well illustrated, in some cases with special plates. The printing and all-round production of the number again call for warm praise.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'F. B. Meyer: his Life and Work,' by M. Jennie Street. ('New Century Leaders' series.) This unpretentious work has evidently been prepared by Miss Street with genuine appreciation of her subject. Into the various phases of Mr. Meyer's character, and the steps by which he has raised himself to his present high position in the ministry, she enters with an unaffected earnestness that shows her warm sympathy. Mr. Meyer possesses the inestimable gift of influencing others to good works, and it is in the hope of making plain the secret of this gift that the present volume has been written. May it prove abundantly successful!

From Éditions de la Revue Bleue, Paris.—'La Bibliothèque Théâtrale Illustrée.' I. 'La Comédie Italienne en France et les Théâtres de la Foire et du Boulevard (1570-1791),' par M. R. M. Bernardin. That there is nothing new under the sun is as true of the stage as of real life. Play actors went on tour three or four hundred years ago as they do now, although this is probably unknown to the majority of present-day playgoers. Indeed, M. Bernardin says that the general public in France—a country where the theatre is far more frequented than here—has only a vague knowledge that in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries a company of Italian players gave performances in Paris, and that some of the best French dramatists, such as Regnard, Dufresny, Marivaux, Favart, and others, wrote for their repertory a multitude of short comic pieces now wellnigh forgotten. So far back as 1570 the Queen Regent, Catherine de Medicis, introduced into France some comedians from her native country. But the Parliament of Paris, vigilant in the taxpayers' interests, soon sent them back to Italy because they charged five or six sols (sous) for each person, while the charge in the Theatre of the Royal Comedians was fixed at two sols, remarking that the Italian charge was a sort of exaction on poor people. Six years later, however, in order to please his mother, Henri III. engaged the famous Gelosi (anxious to please) Company, whose journey to Paris was rather eventful. When near Lyons the Italians were taken prisoners by the Huguenots, but were ransomed by Henri, and their success in Paris, in May 1577, was so brilliant that they attracted a greater concourse of people to their performances at the Hôtel de Bourbon than the four most eloquent preachers of Paris had been able to draw by their discourses. From thenceforth until the days of the French Revolution the position of the Italian comedians visiting Paris was assured; but of course they had their evolutions from Italian comedy to comic opera, and then back again to Italian comedy; but, at last, the Opéra Comique triumphed. All this and much more is pleasantly chronicled in M. Bernardin's work, which contains much matter of theatrical, literary, social, and historical interest, and is illustrated by numerous clever designs by M. Paul Steck and reproductions of historical engravings.

From Messrs. Sands & Co. — 'The New Parisians,' by W. F. Lonergan. Of plot there is little or nothing in this story, and the slenderest peg serves the author for a display of his knowledge of French student life as seen in the Quartier Latin. It is lively, but oftentimes a little overdone. The chief character of the story is an Oxford graduate, who, after leaving that university, determines to study at the Sorbonne, and has a very keen eye for the manners of the place. The most tragic episode of the narrative is when an American husband, whose wife has run away with an 'Unfettered Diplomatist,' interposes and shoots the seducer. The book is full of excellent pictures of French Bohemian life, but these alone will not make a good work of fiction. Mr. Lonergan has wasted much piquant material because he has not grafted it on to a substantial plot. But in individual descriptions there is much to interest the reader, and the various types of student character brought before his notice are invariably novel and amusing.

From Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co. — 'The Prevention of Dampness in Buildings: with Remarks on the Causes, Nature, and Effects of Saline Efflorescences and Dry Rot,' by Adolf Wilhelm Keim. Translated from the German of the Second (Revised) Edition, by M. J. Salter, F.I.C., F.C.S. This concise work, which is mainly intended for the use of architects, builders, overseers, plasterers, painters, and house owners, contains a large amount of highly practical information, excellently arranged. The various causes of dampness and decay are in the first place considered, with the evils arising therefrom, and then we pass to the precautionary measures that should be taken during building, the methods of remedying dampness and efflorescences in the walls of old buildings, the artificial drying of new houses, and so forth. The second part of the volume is devoted to an explanation of the origin of dry rot and the different ways of preventing it. It is an admirable little work, which gains much from the exceptionally clear manner in which the translation has been worded. There are several illustrations, including eight coloured plates.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. — 'An Inland Ferry,' by Susan Christian. While reading this book we continually felt that we were on the point of being interested, but the interest never came; when we had finished, we wondered why we had read it. Miss Christian has a narrow talent, but she has not yet learned to write as well as she may hope to do with more practice. A Member of Parliament, a musician-writer, and a contrary woman should do something of interest in the course of three hundred pages; unfortunately, however, they are insipid individuals, and though we are told by the authoress that they do various things that should command our attention, we do not believe her; not only does she fail to convince us, but she does not even convince herself. We should point out, however, that this is a first book; we think the writer will do better later on.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell. — 'The Twin Sisters' (Roman and Anglican), by John Oates. As stated by the writer in his Preface, the object of this book is fourfold. 1. To show by their own standards and manuals that Roman and Anglican (sic) are identical in the doctrines and practices herein discussed. 2. To bring these doctrines and practices to the test of the Scriptures and the Early Fathers. 3. To trace as far as possible their historic origin. 4. To affirm the simplicity and spirituality of the Christian faith. The information here given with regard to Roman Catholic teaching is not very reconciling, and we should have thought easily accessible elsewhere. The chapter on Indulgences includes an unpleasant statement about a so-called Raffle for Souls which apparently took place at some Roman Catholic church in Mexico; but we fail to see that in this case, at any rate, Roman and Anglican doctrine and practice are proved to be identical. The writer hopes that the book may be found useful, especially to young men and women, in exposing error and defending truth. We have a not unfounded impression, however, that books of religious controversy placed in the hands of the young are often useless and mischievous instead of being useful. Such books do not tend to promote that consideration and respect for the opinions of others which ought to animate professing Christians, and especially in an empire where all religious beliefs are tolerated, and at the present day when the desire for re-union so generally prevails.

From the same. — 'A Plea for the Old Faith,' by Rev. John Tuckwell, M.R.A.S. The substance of three lectures delivered at the Y.M.C.A., Camden Road, will be found in this volume. The lectures are entitled: 'Did Moses write the Pentateuch?'; 'The Inspiration of the Old Testament'; and 'Our Lord's Use of the New Testament.' Doubtless many persons who were unable to hear these lectures when delivered may be glad of the opportunity of reading them in this well-printed volume.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd. — 'London in Shadow, and other Occasional Papers,' by Bart Kennedy. The writer of the forty-two sketches contained in this volume appears to have travelled much, and to have a wide and varied experience of life, which an eye for the picturesque and a keen insight into character enable him to turn to good account. He has grouped these sketches under seven headings. 'London in Shadow' is the first and largest group, and among its fourteen sketches the most successful are those dealing with Jack ashore and the land-sharks who prey upon him, and the sketches which describe the establishments opened in the small hours of morning for the rest and refreshment of those workers whose occupations necessitate the turning of night into day. In the sketch headed 'Night Pictures' there is an amusing discussion between the author and a Scottish compositor who insisted that printers as a class were more intelligent than journalists. 'Journalists were not too strong in grammar, and their ignorance as to punctuation was something woful. "Some o' them canna' read e'en their ain copy," he said, a little sadly.' The group headed 'Retrospective' contains the author's reminiscences of life as a chorus singer, of oystering, of mountain climbing on Ben Nevis, of steerage and cabin passages, and of pugilists. That on 'Hop Pickers,' although not very novel, is well told. 'Anglo-American Contrasts,' on the other hand, contains some information as to the police in the United States that will startle many British readers. 'On the Pacific Slope' contains two of the best articles in the book: 'Stowing Away' and 'At Walterstein's.' The latter is a comical illustration of the remarkable power of a baritone voice and assurance. The last group of sketches, 'On Civilisation's Edge,' gives vivid descriptions of Salt Lake City, Galveston, Balize, and other far-off places quite inaccessible to most general readers, and who may therefore be glad to read of them in this crisply written book.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd. — 'The Road to Paris: a Story of Adventure,' by Robert Neilson Stephens. The plot of Mr. Stephens's romance is not very substantial, but whatever it may lack in this respect is fully atoned for by the variety and excitement of its incidents. The hero is a particularly dashing young fellow, the son of Scottish settlers in Pennsylvania about the middle of the eighteenth century, and from early childhood he shows signs of being possessed of a courageous, danger-loving temperament. He first enters on his career of adventure (after some few comparatively trifling experiences of Indians) when he joins the rising in Massachusetts against the King's forces, and after this he has a lively time indeed, his spirited conduct and somewhat reckless bearing bringing upon him any number of thrilling consequences. It need scarcely be said that love affairs occupy no little of his attention; but, like all high-spirited natures, he is by no means constant to the one charmer, but distributes his favours with gallant impartiality during his eventful progress through life. How he makes his way from his country home to Quebec, and thence in devious and hazardous fashion to London and Paris, encountering such obstacles and troubles on the road as would take the heart out of any ordinary man, but always meeting with an amount of good luck at crucial moments that is the peculiar heritage of heroes of romance, we shall not forestall our readers' pleasure by relating. Enough that when once embarked on the adventures of Master Dick Wetherell they are likely to be very pleasantly entertained. The story is cleverly illustrated by H. C. Edwards.

From Mr. Philip Welby. — 'Ludus Amoris,' by Benjamin Swift. The creations of Mr. Swift's imagination in the present instance live in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden, and are rather a curious crowd. The landlord at 'Floral Court' is a chimney sweep, and as lodgers he has a pickpocket, an old miser who is one of the wealthiest men in London, and an out-at-elbows poet. There is also a doctor, living in York Street, who is devoted to the study of cancer, because the woman to whom he is attached suffers from this disease, and a French flower girl. All these characters are mixed up with one another in a way that is bound to afford considerable astonishment to the reader. Old Elphick, with all a miser's love of handling his property, keeps a large proportion of his wealth, consisting of precious stones, bank-notes, and gold, in a strong box in his room, and this, through an accident, becomes known to the thief and the doctor. The latter robs the old man (also, by the way, suffering from cancer), with a view to pursuing his scientific researches more thoroughly, purchasing a microscope, electric instruments, drugs, and so forth; but the pickpocket, it need hardly be said, is animated by far less worthy motives. What comes of it all we cannot spare the space to relate. Mr. Swift has written better stories than this, but scarcely one in which he has permitted his imagination such complete freedom.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co. — 'A Duchess in Difficulties: a Story of Modern Manners,' by Major Arthur Griffiths. We have previously read a novel on somewhat similar lines to this, and as fiction is popularly supposed to hold the mirror up to nature we can only hope that the disappearance of Duchesses is not about to become a fashionable craze. Her ladyship of Dee, in Major Griffiths' story, has a little disagreement with her husband, and forthwith proceeds to efface herself; that is to say, she leaves the Ducal residence, and, under an assumed name, takes up her residence at a cottage on the river Thames, a little below Bray. Meanwhile the Duke is searching high and low for her. She has left him at an awkward moment, the evening of a dinner party, and he has to excuse her absence to his guests by pretending that she has suddenly been taken very ill, and is confined to her room. For himself, he is strongly convinced that she has run away with a handsome Italian stockbroker, who has been showing her great attention. His object is to find her out and, if possible, avoid any scandal, and in his search he is assisted by an old friend, General Marter. The game of hide and seek is kept up with varying degrees of interest to the end. Imossi, the Italian, is a villain, and really has designs upon the Duchess, which, fortunately, he is prevented from carrying out. The story is briskly told and well supplied with incident, but we fail to see where the 'modern manners' come in. What a peculiar idea, too, Major Griffiths seems to have of newspaper offices and their inmates! At one the Duke, when making inquiries about an advertisement in regard to her ladyship, was assured in drawing accents by 'a slow-speaking, self-possessed man in authority,' who wore an eyeglass, that they were not 'gallus fools.' 'Knew it was an 'oax from the first. Keep your 'air on, Duke; it ain't in, I promise you that.'

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have published 'The Fifth Book of Moses, called Deuteronomy,' edited by G. Wilkins, M.A., B.D., and 'The First and Second Books of Samuel,' edited by James Sime, M.A., F.R.S.E. The names of the editors are sufficient guarantee for scholarly work; it is only our province to say that for neatness and beauty it would be difficult to excel these pocket volumes.—Messrs. Gibbings & Co.'s 'Windsor Edition' of W. Harrison Ainsworth's novels is excellent, and Volumes VIII. and IX. ('Guy Fawkes') reached us a week or two ago.—Mr. John Lane has sent us a beautiful edition of Francis Bacon's essay 'Of Gardens,' of which the cover design is one of the best we have seen for some time. We have also received from the same publisher George Eliot's 'Mill on the Floss,' in a pocket edition.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd., have published Dickens's 'A Tale of Two Cities' in a cheap form. The book is illustrated, and the paper and type, as is to be expected from this firm, are first-rate.—

Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son have sent us a second and cheaper edition of J. A. Hammerton's 'J. M. Barrie and his Books.' We can recommend this volume heartily to those interested in this eminent Scotch novelist's works.—Mr. John Murray has issued a cheap edition of the 'Life of Charles Darwin,' with an excellent portrait. The volume is made complete by two appendices and an index.—Mr. David Nutt's Edition of William Blake's 'Songs of Experience,' with designs by Celia Levetus, is choicely bound, and would make a good present for thoughtful children. The designs show considerable imagination, and a thorough understanding of Blake's spirit and thought.—Mr. Grant Richards has recently issued a cheap edition of his 'Book of Verses for Children,' so ably edited by Mr. E. V. Lucas. The volume has been compiled to meet the long-felt need of parents and teachers for a book 'which shall be a kind of a stepping-stone from the nursery rhyme to the classics of English poetry.'

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns, and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 456 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.
